THE KLONDIKE EPIDEMIC

The Whole Country is Now Suffering from the Gold Fever.

Thousands Expect to Accumulate Wealth, Some by Digging for it, Others by Buying Mining Shares.

(Special Correspondence.)

It is a veritable disease, this Klondike craze. Wherever you go, people talk about Alaska gold and the riches to be had for the mere picking up. Although the season is far advanced, hundreds of intrepid men, made mad by the greed to yellow nuggets, and daring women in search of independence and wealth, are determined to reach Alaska shores during the present season.

The tales of hardship and privation told by miners who have returned from the new Eldorado have no deterrent effect. Each one of the embryo argonauts thinks that he or she will succeed in crossing the fearful passes of Alaska in safety. Each has doubts about the success of his fellow travelers, but in his own good fortune he has implicit confidence.

Last Saturday I met a young fellow who had just arrived in Chicago from Dawson City. He had money in his purse and plenty of words in his mouth. Like the rest of the Klondikers, his sayings have found their way to print. He volunteered the information that the Yukon and Stikine river gold fields were simply inexhaustible and that men familiar with mining could not fail to get rich, "provided"—and this proviso seems regular stock in trade—"they can endure the rigors of the climate and have plenty of provisions and clothing."

Then the picking up of gold nuggets is not exactly what some of the enthusiastic prospectors seem to think it is. Before the nuggets can be picked up, the ground has to be thawed out.

unfortunates who may fall by the wayside and those who win the bonanza of the earth shall yield some of their riches will suffer the obscenity which is the inevitable result of failure.

How universal the gold fever is is testified by a superficial glance at the list of names of those who have already started for the north and those who are about to start. There is, first of all, old Joaquin Miller, "poet of the Sierras," bowed down by years, but strong in the conviction that Fortune is waiting in Alaska to shower auriferous gifts upon him. Then we have Lucky Baldwin, the California horseman, who hopes to restore his tattered fortunes by rich strikes in the Northwest Territory. And beautiful Kuehne Beveridge, daughter of a former lieutenant governor of Illinois, and a scullion of international fame, who prefers traveling over mountains and freezing rides on dog sledges, with gold at the end of the road, to an art career in New York.

And Mrs. Caroline Westcott Romney, of Chicago, who intends to publish a newspaper at Dawson, devoting her leisure moments to digging for gold in adjacent creeks. And a young woman from Chicago whose purpose is the establishment of a school for miners, a sort of academy in the wilderness.

And last, but not least, two Catholic nuns whose sole aim in braving the dangers of an arctic winter is the faithful care of the sick and disabled. One streak of humanitarianism and Christian charity in a chaos of selfishness that like which has not been seen for many years.

But not only those who expect to line their pockets with precious ore in the frozen wastes are suffering from the golden ailment. In every city and village of the country the disease prevails. In the short space of time intervening between the receipt of the news of the finds and the 29th of August, Klondike companies have been organized with a capitalization of scores of millions. ## NEW BUILDING NEEDED.

Present Government Printing Office Should Be Vacated.

In the Early Days All the Printing Needed by the Government Was Done by Contractors.

(Special Washington Letter.)

The government printing office is 37 years old, but the building in which it is housed looks as though it might be 37 centuries old. Previous to the 1st day of May, 1860, the government printing had been done by contract in various ways. The first federal congress which met in New York, March 4, 1779, provided for the printing of 600 copies of the acts of congress, and 700 copies of the journals of the senate and house of representatives.

The first appropriation made by the federal congress which provided specifically for printing was enacted in 1794. "For the expenses of fire wood, stationery and printing work." The same act made an appropriation of $2,241 for the secretary of state, "including the publication of the laws of the first session of the Third congress."

From 1794 to 1819, the government printing was given by contract to the lowest bidder; but on March 3, 1819, a concurrent resolution was passed providing for the election of a printer for congress, who would print all bills in English type on foolscap paper. The resolution fixed the price to be paid for the various kinds of work to be done by the printer of congress.

A joint resolution was passed on August 3, 1836, dispensing with the services of a congressional printer, and reviving the old contract system. This method of printing the work of congress continued until 1852, but it grew to be expensive and unsatisfactory, and an act was passed providing for a superintendent of printing, whose duties were "to advertise for proposals from dealers in paper, and buy all paper used by the government, and superintend all the printing done for the government by the house and senate printers." The act also fixed the price to be paid for composition and press work.

It is a significant fact that the government printing was regarded as a matter of such importance in this early day that on one occasion it almost led to a duel in the United States senate. Alabama, and Senator Henry Clay, of Kentucky, became involved in a bitter controversy over the appointment of the senate printer, and Senator King challenged Senator Clay to fight a duel. A compromise was effected by the mutual friends of the senators and no duel was fought.

Congressman John A. Gurley, of Ohio, was chairman of the committee on printing of the house of representatives in 1860, and he was the author of the bill to establish a government printing office, which was passed by both houses of congress and approved by President Buchanan on May 31, 1860. Although his name is not mentioned in the bill, public print or in private conversation all of the employees of the government printing office know Mr. Gurley's name and reputation, and speak of him with profound respect and admiration. On the day preceding the vote on the bill, Mr. Gurley delivered a speech in advocacy of his measure which was convincing and eloquent. His speech was also quoted in full, and was influential in that body also. In his most impassioned utterances the Ohio statesman declared that there could be no possible opposition to the founding of a government printing office, except the opposition of partisanship, which he deprecated with scorn. Epitomizing the history of the public printing, Mr. Gurley said:

"Sir, the public printing has been made a subject of general discussion, strife, and even quarrels, in both houses of congress, and between the various political parties, with short intervals, for a full half century, and up to this very hour is as prolific a source of public debate, personal speculation and common scandal as at any former period. It has brought more contempt and distrust upon our government than have come from any single cause that can be mentioned.

"If we consult the records of 1819 we shall find as far back as that the congress of the United States bawling in the time of printing receipts, until either to get its work done at the proper time, as stipulated, or even with tolerable accuracy, was horribly executed on poor paper, and never better than wanted.

"The efforts of the spokesmen of all parties have ever been to crush out the laborer of those seeking a radical and genuine reform in that department. The mere partisan does not want the door of the treasury closed against him just as he is about to lay hold of its keys; and as the printing spoils have been regarded as among the most valuable under the government, mere politicians have always had a strong desire to retain them."

Public Printer Palmer is a splendid executive officer who has had great experience in the printing business and who occupied the position of public printer under the Harrison administration. He says: "I am not a spoilsman in the strict sense of that word, although I believe that the political party placed in power by the people should dominate the affairs of every administration. While I am not a spoilsman, I am at the same time opposed to the application of the civil service law to the government printing office. I think it is absurd to require printers and bookbinders to pass school-boy examinations. It is also the height of folly to require laborers and skilled workmen in the various branches of the printing office to pass civil service examinations. The civil service commission knows nothing about the printing office, and certainly has but a faint conception of the administration of the office of the public printer, with his 2,000 assistants. Therefore I think that appointments to the government printing office should be made solely on the basis of merit of the public printer, as to their fitness and character. Under existing civil service rules it is not possible for the public printer to select his assistants for the most important positions in the office. Only old men, who served in the union army, are given preference over school boys."

Every member of the printer's craft in the country who is connected with any department of the "art preservative of all arts" should insist that one of the noblest temples on the globe be erected at the capital of the American republic, which would serve not only the purpose of a practical workshop, from which to issue all the public printing, but as a stately monument to that noble art which more than any other has contributed to the advancement and progress of humanity.

The first public printer was John D. Defrees, of Indiana, who was appointed early in 1861 by President Abraham Lincoln. He held the office until August 31, 1866, when he was removed by President Andrew Johnson, and Cornelius Wendell was appointed, but his tenure of office was very brief. The congress was at that time in controversy with President Johnson, and in the winter following the congress changed the method of appointment and on March 3, 1869, Mr. Defrees was retained to office by the senate under the title of congressional printer.

On April 14, 1869, A. M. Clapp, of New York, was appointed and held the office until June 1, 1877, when John D. Defrees was appointed by President Hayes. During his second term of office Mr. Defrees did a great deal of work in the matter of organization, and he held his position until April 14, 1882, when Sterling P. Rounds, a well-known type founder of Chicago, was appointed by President Arthur.

President Cleveland appointed Thomas E. Benedict, of New York, on April 13, 1886, and President Harrison appointed Frank W. Palmer, of Chicago, to succeed him. On May 7, 1864, Mr. Benedict again became public printer, and held that position until he was succeeded at the beginning of the McKinley administration by the appointment of Frank W. Palmer, who now holds that position.

The original building erected for the use of the public printer in 1850 was purchased by the government in 1860, including the entire printing plant, for $146,445, although the original owner, Mr. Wendell, claimed that the building and outfit cost him $150,000.

The buildings at New stands is about as large as the original building. It has grown in size by the construction of additions, but the entire place is in a reasonable condition, and every public printer for 20 years has urged the congress to make appropriations for the erection of a safe and suitable building.

THE CHILDHOOD ROUTE, CROSSING DYLA RIVER.

This is something of a task when you consider that placer gold is always found next to bedrock, from six to thirty feet below the frozen Arctic surface. "Big fires are built at night, so one man describes the operation," and allowed to burn 12 hours. It takes one cord to the fire. When the ashes are removed the ground is found thawed a few inches. The loose gravel is removed and the fire relit. This procedure is kept up. The wood is carried half a mile in some cases." But coupled with this information comes the assertion that there are still thousands of easily-reached claims in Alaska and the Northwest Territory which will pay as high as $20,000 a year to the man who will work them.

A promise like this knocks out all fear of danger, and makes appealing the specter of the Klondike, which hung about the Klondike last winter, when flour was sold for $1.20 a pound and five pounds of lard brought $11; when miners had to pay $3.00 for a cup of alleged coffee and a bare sandwich; and when 200 men, with $10,000,000 worth of gold dust and suggests among them, came within an ace of actual starvation.

Half of the terrors of the journey from Uman, the new port of entry north of Uman, across the Klondike pass to Dawson City has never been told. Hundreds of those now on the way, and hundreds of those about to start, will either not survive the trip or forever injure their health. But once inoculated with the Klondike virus, nothing will stop a fortune seeker from attempting to reach the fabled region. Some will succeed in getting there. Some will "strike it rich." Others will "strike it rich." But when we shall leave much next summer, the

THE NEW STATE CAPITOL.

From the Duluth Evening Herald.

There is a story about that the St. Cloud people, who are kicking strongly because the capitol commission preferred Georgia marble to Minnesota granite for the new state capitol, have been considering the question of taking the matter into the courts, by applying to the attorney general for permission to use his name to secure an injunction restraining the commission from using the Georgia stone.

THE PINE COUNTY FAIR.

To Be Held at Pine City, Minnesota, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Sept. 16, 17 and 18, 1897.

The Pine County Agricultural and Stock-Breeders Association will hold its eighth annual fair at the fair grounds on the north side of the river at this place on the 16th, 17th and 18th of this month, and promises to be the best ever held in the county. Work is being done on the race track, and when completed it will be the best half-mile track in this part of the state. The management, leaving no stone unturned to make the coming fair the best that was ever held in Pine county. Watch the small bills for the program of sports. If you have a fine variety of vegetables, bring them to the fair. If you have good corn, bring a sample to the fair. If you have good wheat, oats, rye, or in fact any grain, bring it along to the fair, and if you have a fine colt, or foal, or cow, don't forget to bring them to the fair and get the premium. The following are the various committees:
HORSE—L. H. McKusick, E. L. Seavy and D. Greeley.
SWINE—LARRY DIER, E. L. George, FARMER COOP, R. L. Grady, F. A. Hodge, W. H. Nowark, John McGann, R. Hoagland, Wm. Peters and R. Grant.
LADIES DIER, Mesdames J. Y. Breckenridge, J. A. Bede, W. E. Smith, L. H. McKusick, Chas. Vose and Chas. Storchan.
GATE KEEPERS—Geo. Payne and J. C. Miller.
Rocky Mountain Tea is composed of roots, herbs, gums and leaves that nature made its great medicine.

PINE CITY VS. ST. CROIX FALLS.

One of the best games of base ball seen in this village this year was the game on Sunday last between a nine from St. Croix Falls and the local team.
The game was called at twenty minutes to two. The home team led all the way through, but in the eighth inning the St. Croix Falls boys came within one of tying the score, which seemed to put renewed life and vigor into the home team, and for one inning a beautiful game of ball was played.
The St. Croix boys are gentlemen, and the local team treat them right royally, and it is to be hoped that we will be enabled to get up a game with them for the last day of the fair, or whenever we can make the necessary arrangements.
The score by innings was as follows:
St. Croix Falls.....1 0 1 0 0 0 4 4-6
Pine City.....2 3 1 0 0 1 4 4-11

He Likes It.

Dr. S. O. Francis.
The Veteran Editor of the Freedomian writes Dr. Fenner:
'I have been using your Blood and Liver Remedy and Nerve Tonic, and desire to say that I like it. I find it an admirable remedy for the biliousness, languor and nervous depression incident to the changing seasons, sufficiently phytical and yet not debilitating but strengthening instead.'
