Arnold Cranston purchased the old F. A. Hodge residence, recently occupied by A. Pennington, last week, and has a crew of carpenters at work erecting a new barn and making other improvements.

Cape as he is better known has rented his farm, two miles west of here for two years to the Smith Bros.

Through an oversight we neglected to mention in our last issue the departure of Mrs. Mary Gamble on October 14th, for Magic, Oregon, where she will make her future home. Mrs. Gamble is one of Pine City's oldest residents and her scores of friends although sorry to see her go wish her joy and success in her new home.

A. A. Danielson, of Gowrie, Iowa, called on the PIONEER Monday and will read Pine county news for the next twelve months. Mr. Danielson has purchased a farm near Grator, and has just completed the erection of a house and barn on his farm. Mr. Danielson returned to his home at Gowrie, but will return with his family next spring and make Pine County his home.

During the week past our town has been crowded with farmers from all directions of the surrounding country hauling in their grain for shipment to the Pine City Roller Mills. Grain from these parts was shipped to the same mill last fall and the shippers were well satisfied with the returns.

The above from the Moose Lake Star speaks well for manager Allen and also shows that Carlton county farmers are sensible folks and can appreciate fair treatment.

The new Knight's of Pythias hall is completed and the furniture is moved in Wednesday and the first meeting being held that evening. The hall is 25 x 55 feet inside with two large ante-rooms and four rooms for parlor for the different Lodges that will lease the same. The hall is the finest in this section of the country and when carpeted and otherwise improved, by putting a chair platform around and elevating the stations, will compare favorably with any hall in the Twin cities.

Chas. Staunty last week disposed of his property to Mr. E. W. Piper, father of our enterprising furniture dealer, for $650.00. Mr. Piper will at once finish the house throughout and make other improvements. Mr. Staunty expects to leave for the north where he has a chance to invest his money and make a good thing out of it. Mr. and Mrs. Staunty's many friends here will be sorry to lose them from their midst, but all join with the PIONEER in wishing them continued prosperity wherever they may decide to cast their lot.

THE SATSUMA BOWL.

By M. B. Williams.

"WHERE on earth did you get that bowl?" asked Nelly Marshall to her old maid, Mrs. Graves. She and her friend, Miss Davenport, had stopped at the old woman's cottage on their return from a long, hot walk to get a drink of her cool well water.

As Mrs. Graves opened her cupboard to take out her one tumbler, Nelly Marshall saw to her surprise, "Mrs. Graves! You have a chin bowl!"

"That chin bowl, is it, honey? Why, it was my mother's over all I was born, and she set great store by it. My father was a sailor, and he needed it, and all kinds of queer things from his voyage."

"The chin bowl, but that one bowl, and somehow I've got it fixed in my mind that I won't have any good luck if anything happens to that bowl."

The two girls glanced at each other. Good luck and poor luck had seemed to go apart. She was very old, and had received little from her family and friends. She picked up a wretched living by knitting and quilting. She owned the little cottage in which she lived, and with sturdy independence refused the charity of her neighbors, save during her attacks or rheumatism, which of late were frequent and severe. She pitied and respected the desolate old woman.

"Well, what do you think of this?" Nelly breathlessly exclaimed, holding out the bowl. When Mrs. Graves had gone to the washroom,

"I see an old chin bowl," laughed Miss Davenport, a queer-looking, and very dirty, and a little chippered at the edges."

"You see a genuine Satsuma!" Nelly said, impressively. "I question whether another such can be found in this country. Look at that delicate glaze of dull gold at the rim, the edge, and those birds with outstretched wings in the center!" Why, it's a treasure!"

"It is!" Ellie answered, indifferently. "It just looks to me like a queer bowl. Very nice for a milk bowl."

"A milk bowl! You know I spent year before last with my Aunt Mrs. Davenport, in Europe, and she and her friends gave her for part of vacation this Satsuma. Aunty is a great collector of old china, and as she is very wealthy and a great traveler, she has some superb specimens. Why, she gave $40 for a Satsuma cup and saucer that isn't to be compared with any of her friends gave her for part of vacation this Satsuma. Aunty is an expert in China. I'd give anything in the world to own this bowl, and I'm going to have it too! Hush! Here comes the old woman. Not a word to her of its value!"

"Here's your bowl, Mother Graves," she said, handing it to her with an indifferent air. "It's very queer, and I would like to have it in my cabinet of curiosities. I suppose you wouldn't care to sell it?"

"Land sakes, no honey!" laughed the old woman. "Who'd buy an old thing like that? I can't sell back bow. It would be no use to use to anybody but me, and it really isn't any use to me, but it's all that's left of my old life, and I think it would break my heart to look in the cupboard and find it gone."

"Very well, Mrs. Graves, but you ever change your mind and wish to sell it, let me have the refusal. I'll give you more for it than anyone around here."

As the girls walked home Nelly was silent and preoccupied.

"I'll have that bowl, and then I'll suddenly say, 'I can't sell back bow. The old woman can hardly hobbles about now, and it won't be long before she is laid up. That will be my time, and won't it be a triumph to show my aunt as fine a piece of chintz as she has in her whole collection—and at a bargain too!"

Ellie looked at her friend in mute surprise. Nelly was a good girl, kind-hearted and humane, and yet she was exciting now that a poor, wretched creature should be tortured with pain, and laid on helpless and hopeless, in order that it might give her an opportunity to possess an old piece of chintz. A mania for ceramics, she thought, was what caused the sympathetic and often the heart.

"What will you give Mrs. Graves for the bowl?" she asked.

"Oh, a fair price. She'll think it more than fair. But of course I'm not much to offer even a quarter of the actual value. I could give right off afford it. Don't look so grave, as if we're going to swindle the old woman!"

A pearl is only a pearl in one who knows its value, and to Mrs. Graves it is only an old, useless china bowl."

"But some one might give its value to the poor old creature!"

"Now, look here, Mrs. Davenport. Nelly cried, red in anger, "you talk as if you were going to take a dishonest advantage of the woman? Who would give 25 cents for it here? In this little out-of-the-way village the people have never even heard of Satsuma ware. Why, it will stay on that shelf forever. Mrs. Graves is dead and buried, and there is nothing inside, or some old woman will keep her milk in it. No, I expect to get the bowl at a bargain; and my conscience won't trouble me if I take it!"

Nelly was correct in thinking the bowl would seem cheap to the woman. In less than a week Mrs. Graves sent for her. She found the old woman in bed, a cold room and suffering terribly from rheumatic fever. On a little table by the bed was a tumbler of water and a plate of food, sent in by some pitying neighbor.

"Seems as if that turns my stomach," she said, "but I'll take the water, and I'm mighty good in Mrs. Ives to send it. Jenny" to a little girl who had come in, "won't you pick up some chips and make a blaze, so you can get warm and make a fire, and I'll get you a cup of tea when I'm just ready to go with thist. Miss Nelly." I need you to tell you if I'm too weak to go with thist. I'm too weak to work, and I haven't a cent to buy medicine or firewood!"

Nelly's heart beat high with delight. "Certainly, Mrs. Graves," she said. "I meant what I said, and I'll give you what you want."

"I don't think a dollar is too much."

Nelly glanced at the aspect穷困的 of the room, the poor old woman's puny drawn face, and for very shame at her self-blushed face. But the bowl must be hers.

"Mrs. Graves," she said, hurriedly, "here you are dollars for the bowl, and here's the money." She took it out of her pocket.

"Five dollars!" exclaimed the old woman, in astonishment. "Miss Nelly, honey, I reckon it's because you want to give me the most for it, but the old bowl is worth half that."

"It's not half," Nelly said, hastily, with a sudden twinge of conscience, "and I had more money I'd give it, but this is my last cent."

"My, I afraid you're paying for just a whim! Please bring me the bowl, Miss Nelly, so I can tell it good-by before I go to bed."

"Willya bring it to the bedside, and the tears were in the old creature's eyes, when I took it in her trembling hands.

"It is all that is left of me, blessed old time. When I look at it, I see all—father, mother, husband and children, all lying in the chairs. It was my mother present from father, when I was born. I remember the night I was married. Everybody wished me health and prosperity, but father, he says: "Health and prosperity are mighty good things, but I don't for a moment doubtest and fate destined with all the world."

Yes, he were his exact words. It is hard to part with the last thing I have of him." She pressed it to her quivering lips with a sob, and handed it to Nelly.

"Don't think I'm not thankful to you, Miss Nelly," she said. "I'm sorry at parting with it. You have given me six dollars in value. God bless you. You're a kind heart. May God deal with you as you've dealt with a poor, desolate old woman!"

Nelly hurried home with her treasure, these words kept ringing in her ears and beating at her heart. Some how she did not feel accomplished over the regards as she had expected. But the next day she packed her bowl and took the first train for the city of New Orleans.

"Why, it's unique—it's worth it's weight in gold, Nell!" her aunt cried, ecstatically. "Where did you pick it up?"

"Oh, I got it at a bargain," was all Nelly could say.

There was a meeting of Mrs. Davenport's friends at her house that night to inspect the bowl. One of them, Mr. Wentworth, a gentleman of large for whose collection of old china was one of the most costly in the United States, was present. He was greatly pleased. "I never saw but one like this before, and it was in a private collection in Japan. It would be priceless if it weren't for that chip on the edge, and that brown stain; but even as it is, it's worth $200 to any collector, and I'd be glad to give that or more to own it, if you ever care to part with it, Miss Nelly."

That night, when Nelly lay sleepless on her bed, the words of old Mrs. Graves kept ringing in her ears. "And he says: 'I wish for them honesty and fair dealing,' and then the words so fervently spoken: 'May God deal with you as you've dealt with a poor, desolate old woman!'

"When he rose in the morning her mind was made up. She told her aunt the story, concealing nothing of her own dignity.

"And now, aunt," she said, "I look upon myself as only the custodian of the bowl. I am going to get all I can for it, however, so far as I can, the poor old woman comfortable at the best of her life."

When it was found that the bowl was for sale, the bidding was fast and furious among the collectors; but now went higher than Mr. Wentworth, and it became bid $1,000, then $1,200.

"The price of the definite collector who had opened it became known in the circle, and another hundred was added to the fund for her support. When Nelly told Mrs. Graves what had been done, the old woman exclaimed, in devout wonder:

"O my blessed Lord, thou hast worked a miracle for me in my great need. I can't help crying, you dear, blessed relief! The tears are tears of relief, for you have lifted me out of the depths!"

"What will you give Mrs. Graves for the bowl?" she asked.

"Oh, a fair price. She'll think it more than fair. But of course I'm not much to offer even a quarter of the actual value. I could give right off afford it. Don't look so grave, as if we're going to swindle the old woman!"

PITH AND POINT.

Too many people in this world do things for the sake of an encore—Old cargo days. Mrs. Graves is a good example of this. She is a cheap compliment to tell people they are exceeding their strength, but it always hits the bull's-eye.—Atchison Globe.

BOUND TO FAIL.

The Loss of Football Players Sealed the College's Doom.

This promising young Detractor, six feet in the clear and trim as a racing star, went to his deathbed. "What can we do about the establishment to do?" he began, wretchedly.

"Well find a place for you, my boy, when the time comes."

"But now? What is to be done?"

"See that my son, if you've been getting into trouble, and need money, say so. Don't appear me in this roundabout way. I'm in the spring of my life, and I've been over the course. Out with it."

"I don't have a dollar and there's nothing to come from a car and there's nothing will be no more college for me, and I'm not going to stay around home as a deadhead."

"My mother would be very angry if she sawed me. The business was never more prosperous, and I have plenty. Of course, you have had a hard time, but I'll swell the allowance if you think best."

"No, I've concluded to cut it all and go to work. I've got a job lined up with another alma mater. Besides, the other fellows would all be new. I would have no enemies."

"Certainly you'd not change. No one thought you were thinking of God and man with the boys you started with."

"Father, you don't understand. That instinct which has led me to be the best football players have sent word that they must drop out. It is all up, and I want a job."—Detroit Free Press.

THIRSTY DEVEN.

A spirit of rebellion shown by a young woman who entered a car with sandy looks and bundles. Another young person came up and asked her what she was doing here.

"Oh, my, who is to be married?"

"Then where is the flower for?"

"The funeral; on tender died, and we girls put together to get this wreath."

"The next thing, did she know she was going to die?"

"The wreath was the wreath?"

"Two dollars and sixty cents. I only had two-twenty-five."

"Did you pay the difference?"

"Dear no, I made him give it to me for two dollars, so I saved my own quarters I am in, in trying to make the girls think I'm poor."

"Well, that's right; the wear and tear is worth a quarter, surely!"—Detroit Free Press.

Hoy's Dewey Souvenir.

Souvenirs of Dewey are to be had on every hand, if not for the mere asking, at least for the price of a postage stamp. Souvenirs, that have no intimate connection with the life of the great admiral. If one might venture to say, that the world has been his own, that would be a different matter.

A certain small boy has a keen appreciation of the great admiral, and has been more highly favored than the average mortal, for he has not even penetrated the schoolroom walls of the Olympic. He is the hero of Manila face to face. He was taken aboard ship by his father. After his return home, he has been seen to be always low, was going about carrying his hat, carefully bound up in a handkerchief. "Have you seen him?"—"No, I have not."

"Hurt my hand. Not so pleasant. Then in great dignity: "That is the hand that Dewey shook!"—N. Y. Sun.

Wrath.

"Fine lot of guys they are," said the admiral, "to be calling me dishonest. I never took a cent of pay from anyone that I didn't render value received."—Indianapolis Journal.

HANDY CIDER PRESS.

To Make One Requires Neither Much Money Nor Abundance of Ingenuity.

To make a cider press take a plank by 12 inches by 12 feet, soft wood will do, but hard is better. Saw two pieces four feet long and two pieces two feet each again in each of the long pieces four inches from the end and about one inch deep as far as the thickness of the short planks. Then spike the four corners illustrated. Get a carpenter's iron head screw at a cost of about a dollar, which does for the screw. For the cheese crib, get two hoops made of heavy iron hoop. Punch holes about 1½ inches apart along 1½ inches wide and with small mallet or screw a few times the stakes inside the hoops, leaving them one-fourth inch apart. There should be a false bottom to catch and conduct the cider. For a grinder take a clean slate or flour barrel and saw off at the top, then take a board and nail it across the hole and take a hoop a little smaller than the barrel head, and tack it on the outside of the tub head. This is to support the tub bottom. Then take a piece of 3 by 4 by 4 by 3 foot scantling and chop off about half an inch from the end, then cut a notch and round off the end. A block of hard wood with the hole bored in it one inch deep for the screw to work in must be made to keep from bending. Such a press can be made for $3 or $4. Bushels of apples go to waste on many farms which could be utilized by making into cider or vinegar. —A. C. McPherson, in Farm and Home.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES.

How an Eastern Horticulturist Obtained Success After a Number of Failures.

Three years ago I came into possession of a practical and valuable farm, consisting of about 100 acres of land, and three miles in length, with many hillsides and places which could not be cultivated.

I wished to get trees growing on these places; how to make them grow from the seed I did not know, nor could I find anyone who did! so I went to work planting chestnuts in different ways to see which would succeed.

writes a contributor to Country Gentleman.

I first took a six-tined fork, forced it into the turf two inches deep and say four inches forward, threw a chestnut under and drew out my fork.

I then tried to plant them in the same way, but with no success, so I dug up a chestnut, so calling a man I did the lifting of the turf and he threw the chestnuts. The result was that every chestnut grew, and they are not two feet high. Then I plowed a half acre, dropped a chestnut every two steps and stepped over it, then I dropped a chestnut every four feet on the edge of furrow, and back-furrowed against this. Not 20 trees started on the whole place; those which did start were when they were covered with earth, and the plants were cut down with a brush.

One pint of linseed oil, four pounds of rosin and one pound of beeswax, melted well together, make a good grafting wax.

When weeds or grass are allowed to grow with the vines they rot them to the ground, that rightly belongs to the plants.

Plant raspberries in rows five feet apart and three feet apart in the row; blackberries in rows eight feet apart and three feet apart in the row.—St. Louis Republic.

WOOD ASHES for Apple Trees.

In some recent tests it was found that the foliage was greatly improved in sections of orchards treated with wood ashes, and that the trees were free from disease. The color of the fruit was also improved in some seasons, and with some varieties, but during the seasons which favored the perfect development of the fruit the color was not heightened. Apparently the use of ashes has a tendency to hasten the perfect development of the fruit. Some seasons this ripening process was carried so far where ashes were used that the apples did not keep as well as on portions untreated. — Prairie Farmer.

Wastefulness is a Crime. One of the important things about good farming that most of us have to learn is that we must not waste our land that we do not farm; we can only half cultivate our fields and so waste both land and labor; we leave a large percentage of the crop in the field; we waste time and capital in raising inferior animals; we waste energy in trying to do more than one man can do right; we waste time in trying to raise crops which should raise themselves; we waste opportunities to improve our condition by staying away from institutes and fairs and by neglecting to read papers; we waste—in a thousand ways, and then we are ready to say "farming pay." And it is no wonder—Montana Fruit Grower.

Borers should be cut or probed out whenever they are present. Their presence may be known by the sawdust-like castings of the insect or by depressions in the bark.

ONE-YEAR-OLD TREES.

According to a Kansas Horticulturist, 1st They Can Be Planted Safely in Most Sections.

The injury and destruction to nursery trees caused by the severity of last winter has made it necessary to sell younger trees for a year or two to come than are usually sold. The reason is that the trees are of old age, the season of planting apple and pear trees less than two years old. While there may be some objections to planting one-year-old trees there are several points in their favor. In digging them very few roots are cut, compared with those of two-year-old trees, and the root system is less than with larger trees. There being no side branches the head can be formed to any desired height and of any style. There is less danger of getting San Jose scale or any other like pest on small and young trees.

The original cost of one-year-olds is less than of older ones. They are small and light, and therefore cheaply transported. The objections are greater liability of injury from careless persons in working about them than there were last year, and later spring frost damage. There are缺点, but these are the two that are commonly raised. The latter one is disputed by some orchardists, they claiming that the younger trees having more roots in proportion to their tops than larger ones grow faster and more easily than the older ones. This has come true in some cases in my own experience, and I have sold many thousands of one-year-old apple trees to Kansas neighbors and others, many of which have fully recovered.

It is a fact, however, that the one-year-olds are more difficult to care for than the two-year-olds.
