WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Apr. 29th, 1901.

All aboard for San Francisco! The Presidential special, composed of seven cars, each the finest of its kind, left Washington to-day to remain on the road until June 15, and to travel 10,351 miles in all. The booklet containing the complete schedule of the trip gives the names of forty as the members of the party but that was prepared before it was known that Secretary and Mrs. Long, were going to Colorado in advance. Besides Mrs. McKinley, there are nine ladies in the party. Secretary Cortelyou and three White House stenographers will handle any executive business, business which the President may find it necessary to transact. The public will not lack full details of the trip, as each of the three big press associations has a representative on the train, also each of the three Washington daily papers, and each of the three most prominent New York illustrated weeklies has a special artist aboard. There is also a photographer. Both the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies have operators on the train, with all the facilities for sending messages direct. There may perhaps, been finer single cars than any on this special train, but it is certain that there has never been a finer special train as a whole. It is a first-class hotel on wheels, and it contains everything that could be asked for the comfort of the most fastidious guest. It would not be absolutely necessary for any passenger to leave this train during the entire six weeks trip, although they will frequently do so.

There is an amusing side to the visit to the Cuban committee to Washington, which has furnished fun for those who came in contact with its members. They had the speediest and about the worst case of swollen head ever seen in Washington, where the big head is an every day complaint, with little fellows who suddenly become intoxicated with the greatness which they imagine goes along with a newly assumed office. The Cubans didn't have that kind of big head. Theirs was brought on by the jollying they received from officials from the President down. It began when they were met at the railway station by two army officers, who informed them that they had been detailed by the Secretary of War to escort them to their hotel, and to look after their comfort during their stay in town, and culminated at the State Dinner in the White House, where all the prominent men in Washington at the time, had a hand in pushing the jolly along. Since then each one of those Cubans has acted as though he thought that he was the greatest thing that ever happened. The old saw about catching more flies with molasses than with vinegar has apparently done another successful stunt. The jollying has been so efficacious that the Cubans have promised to go home and recommend to the convention that the conditions laid down by the Platt amendment be accepted. They tried to get a promise in exchange from the President that he would ask Congress to admit Cuban sugar and tobacco free of duty, but did not succeed. The nearest they got was his promise to appoint commissioners to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the government of Cuba as soon as it was established.

G. W. Bolton, of La., a member of the executive committee of the American banking association, stopped in Washington on his way home from New York, where he attended a meeting of the committee which decided that the association should hold its next meeting in Milwaukee. In reply to questions, Mr. Bolton said: "I do not know of a period when the state of Louisiana has been more prosperous than at present. The banks are full of money. When the banks are doing well other industries thrive and vice versa.

There has been great development in many of the state's industries—in rice growing, in sugar production and timber, with the depletion of the forests of the Northwestern states, the timber produced in Louisiana is coming in great demand chiefly now the longleaf pine which is of finer quality than in any of the adjoining states. We have much valuable hardwood, but that is not yet used very extensively."

"Our little girl was unconscious from strangulation during a sudden and terrible attack of croup. I quickly secured a bottle of one minute Cough Cure, giving her three doses. The croup was mastered and our little darling speedily recovered." So writes A. L. Spafford, Chestert, Mich. J. Y. Breckenridge

ACCIDENT AT PIONEER HOUSE.

Water Tank holding sixty barrels of water crashes through the roof and demolishes the room, narrow escape.

Saturday afternoon at about one o'clock the tank that supplied water to the Pioneer house fell, crashing in the roof and going clear to solid ground. The tank was put in about a year ago and was considered perfectly safe, but for some unaccountable reason the timbers supporting it gave way letting it down it going through the toilet room, smashing everything in its path to kindling wood. Mr. McClaskey with the Cosgrove Merry-makers, narrowly escaped with his life, as he had but just got through washing for dinner when he heard something crack overhead, he jumped into the hall but the water caught him up and buried him up against the wall wetting him as if he had been dipped in the lake. It was a close call for if he the tank had fallen half a minute sooner it would have crushed him into a pulp. Mr. Stone places the damages at over $200.

Mothers of good judgment and experience give their little ones Rocky Mountain Tea this month, keeps them well. 35c. Made by the Madison Medicine Co. J. Y. Breckenridge.

COSGROVE ENTERTAINMENT.

Last Friday evening the Cosgrove company gave one of their excellent entertainments in Rath's hall to a large and appreciative audience. The musical part of the entertainment was the best that was ever heard in this town. The special parts that took the audience were the alliuminum chimes, musical glasses and the guitar duets. Each one of the performers are entitled to praise but those deserving of special mention were John Cosgrove and Ernest McClaskey on the musical novelties, Mulligan and Mack in comedy and Bert Harris in vocal selection. Mulligan is the Irishman was exceedingly fine and Miss Mack as the country girl in the city brought down the house. Mr. Cosgrove and Mr. McClaskey are both musicians of no mean ability and whenever they visit this town they can be sure of a crowded house. After the show those feeling so inclined tripped the light fantastic for a couple of hours.

Our citizens will have the pleasure of hearing those gentlemen again as they have signed a contract to appear here on Sept. 5, with a seven piece orchestra, all of the players being first-class musicians and artists on the instruments they play. There will be a concert of about two hours duration to conclude with a grand ball. The press notices of this orchestra are very flattering to the players, and those who attend both the concert and ball will go away well pleased with the money and time expended. Remember the date, Sept. 5, 1901.

All those who attended the entertainment speak of it in the highest terms and say it was one of the finest entertainments they ever attended.

Come again Mr. Cosgrove, as you will be sure of a warm reception from the amusement loving people of this town.

WHY HIS HAIR TURNED WHITE Colonel Dan Casey's Tale of His Nerve Testing Experience with Indians.

One night lately a party of old-time New Mexicans accidentally met here, and after talking over various times they proceeded to congratulate each other on their youthful appearance.

Well," said the colonel, "I'll tell you how it happened, boys, and I never told the story before. It was the year when Judge McGomms and his wife were killed by the Indians in Burro mountains—'83 or '84. I have forgotten which it was, but it was the year that event, however, when things had quieted down a bit. I had been in the hills for some time and was returning to my home city through the Burro mountains, and, of course, was on the look-out for Indians. My horse became sick and I stopped to let him rest. I pulled off the saddle and took it to a tree early in the morning and lay down. I was soon fast asleep, but how long I slept I do not know. I was awakened by some one trying to get into my tent, so as my eyes were open I saw that I was surrounded by 12 or 13 Indians.

The first thing I did was to get up and find them in their hands. Well, sir, I was so badly scared that I could not speak or move—I was paralyzed. I sat there and looked at them, and they looked at me. I felt my hair straighten out, and I knew that it was standing straight up. I thought of every man and thing that I had done in all my life. Pray? No, I couldn't lift a hand to bless myself. I knew that they would kill me and my only hope was that they would shoot me. I could almost feel their lances sticking through my body. It seemed to me that they stood there all day all night at me, and I could not get up. Their ugly mugs are stamped on my memory forever. I would recognize any one of them in a crowd to-day if I should meet him. Some of them were two or three other Indians fooling with my horse, as he was too sick to try to get away from them. Presently they came to me and I saw that they were soon they were all gone but one, who seemed to be the boss of the outfit. He had a gun in his hand and told me in good English, and said: 'Good day, Dan Casey.' How he knew my name has always been a mystery to me. He may have seen me on reservation, or possibly my name may have been on some part of my outfit and he could read, as many of them can.

"After he had gone I still sat there so badly scared that I was unable to move. For I don't know how long. I thought they would come back and would kill me should I attempt to get up. Then, like a flash of lightning, it came to me that they were government soldiers. I leaped to my feet, threw the saddle onto my horse, and although he was sick I am sure that I beat all records in covering distance to Silver City. I felt so good when I got into town that I set 'em up to everybody. I told them how my birthday and that I never was so happy in all my life, and that was the truth. I have been blown up in a mine, have had my body crushed before and with dynamite caps, which kept the doctors busy for a week picking them out, but I never was scared before as I was that day. There is no scar on my face, but I have a scar on my forehead, like that of an Indian scar. Well, inside of a week from that time my hair was all white with gray and I am today."

THE STORY

Making Nannette Happy.

BY BELA WHEELER WILCOX.

The first time he saw her he was ten years old and she two. Her parents had taken possession of the house next door to his own home about the previous week. It was a warm May afternoon and he was coming home from school with his books strapped over his shoulder when he heard a scream of a child fall on his ear, a scream full of injury pain and rebellious grief. He turned in the direction of the sound, and saw a vision of childish loveliness—a tangle of golden hair, two great eyes swimming in tears like panned gold, and her arms and hands tossed into a bowl of water, a pursed up spot of crimson where the mouth should be, two dimpled cheeks, the size of pink rosebuds, beating the air, while the small feet stamped in violent rage. With the screams of the child he mingled the wail of a cat and the voice of a woman in cap and apron who appeared to be the child's mother.

"No, no, Nannette must not pull the poor kitty's tail, it is very naughty," said the woman, "it hurts the pussy and makes her sick." But the child in question sprang on the garden fence ready to make its escape into the street, and this augmented the grief of the small mother, and she uttered a most plaintive cry. She threw her pretty body on the ground and beat the earth with her fists. The mother, at the top of her voice, "I want my Nannette—I want my Nannette." The sight of the beautiful babe's grief was too much for Master Albert Orton, tender hearted. He sprang forward and seized the unsuspecting cat in his arms, leaped the garden fence like a young deer, and feeling by Nannette he said soothingly: "Here, baby, here, is the kitten for you. Don't cry, don't cry any more. Albert will hold the kitty while you play with it."

After that Albert and Nannette were the greatest friends imaginable. He hastened home from school to play with her, and there was no sacrifice on his part too great to make for the gratification of the small damsel's least whim. She would lean a neck with his slate, toss his marble into the well to hear them "chuck" against the water, mix mud pies in his Sunday hat, break his hoop and lose his bat, and there was never a word of complaint from his lips. To make Nannette happy was his chief desire. She was a most defective child, and seemed never content until she had ruined every toy she touched, whether her own or another's. As a consequence she was almost unpopular with the children of her own age; they rebelled at having their playthings destroyed, and as years passed by and Nannette grew more inquisitive and destructive, she clung more and more to Albert as a companion and playmate, because he alone allowed her to have and do whatever she desired.

Nannette was eight and Albert 16 when he was sent away to college. She wept so violently at the separation that Albert would have relinquished the project of acquiring an education had he been his own master. Nine years before that time, her mother, Nannette's father died and her mother took her abroad to be educated in a convent, and then there was a year of travel to the continent. During this time Nannette was thrown with a party of American people, and became engaged to Sylvester Cameron, a young man of fine family and fortune. Perhaps the evident desire of Mrs. Sylvester's part that her son should devote himself to a certain profession in the army was one reason in hastening Nannette's betrothal. Miss Dorris was a very sweet girl, amiable and earnest, and, although a dependent upon her relatives, Nannette's mother eyes read the woman's heart in her breast and knew that she possessed all the requisites for a good wife.

But Nannette's wifely face and appealing eyes carried the day, and Mrs. Sylvester gave her blessing with a stilled sigh. Meanwhile Nannette's mother stipulated that the marriage should not take place until a year had passed. They returned to their American home to prepare for the occasion, and found Albert Orton back from college, settled in the practice of law, winning laurels as an orator. The first surprise a rumor reached of the news of Mrs. Orton's engagement to a young woman who had met while in college, a daughter of one of the professors. This bit of news seemed to produce an extraordinary effect upon Nannette. She neither ate nor slept, and she passed hours in vain weeping. It was only in the presence of Albert that she called daily, that she showed the least interest or pleasure in life. Finally she broke down one day when he was calling, and a cloud when he was calling, and she had always loved Albert and no one else, and that the thought of his marrying another woman was bitter than death. Her own entanglement she spoke of as a foolish mistake, and surprised her mother by the announcement that she had already broken from it and had returned Mr. Cameron's ring! As the weeks passed by, Nannette's condition became alarming, and she seemed on the verge of nervous collapse. Albert's sympathies were constantly worked upon, his vanity flattered and his early romantic affection for his little playmate revived, with the silly, childish elements of passionate admiration of the young girl's beauty of person. He argued to himself that Nannette's claim could first, and that the tie between them was too sacred to sever. Since she had not hesitated to break a later engagement he ought not to show less moral courage. He could not see her suffer as she was evidently suffering, when a single word from him would restore her to happiness. So he wrote to his fiancée and asked for a release from his promise of marriage, and three months later he married Nannette's wife. Mr. Sylvester Cameron was reported as taking a rapid transit voyage to the dogs about that time and the professor's daughter died of spinal meningitis the next year, but Nannette was happy and that was, as it always had been, the chief aim of Albert's heart.

During the first two years she seemed almost joyfully happy in his love and companionship, and life was a paradise to Albert. He was growing in his profession, he was making and saving money, and he had the sweetest and most domestic little wife in the world, whose whole happiness lay in his society. What more could a man ask?

Then came a change. Nannette wanted a larger home, more servants than a carriage. Of course, Albert granted these desires, since he valued his increasing fortune as a means of contributing to Nannette's happiness. Even the rather elaborate and to him tiresome entertainments which she grew fond of giving in her own home afforded Albert a melancholy sort of pleasure, he watching her enjoyment of the role of hostess. Perhaps one of the hardest trials of a man's life is when he is asked to take lessons in the art in order to be able to teach his wife. Nannette developed a passion for elocution, and announced her desire to take lessons in the art in order to be able to teach her friends. "You see, I do not sing or play well myself," she said, "to give my friends any entertainment, I never had any opportunity to do so. This makes me a sort of nobody in society. Nearly every woman I know does something. Now, it is easy to learn to recite bits of verse, and it will render me a better hostess and a more popular guest."

"But it is not easy to learn to recite verses well," Albert suggested. "It requires a talent and a vast deal of practice. Really done it is torture to the audience." "Why worry if you think I will be incapable of doing it? Well I will disgrace you by any attempts," cried Nannette with a flood of angry tears, which Albert mistook for tears of wounded feeling. He wanted to try with tender words of praise, and love, and Nannette began her lessons in elocution the next day. Then came the period of torture for a proud, sensitive and loving man, who is obliged to witness some unworthy and crude performance of the woman he had betrothed and who had flattered acceptance of the insincere "bravo's" which change into ridicule as soon as her back is turned. Nannette was young, beautiful, vivacious, an agreeable converser, and universally admired. Yet she was not content with these charms which a generous nature had bestowed, and must attempt to shine in a role to which she was wholly unfitness. Meanwhile Albert felt obliged to close his lips and restrain his honest criticisms of her attempt at "elocution," because he knew such criticisms would make her angry and unhappy, and he had resolved to render Nannette happy at all costs.

They had been married four years when Nannette decided to take a trip to Europe. She went with her mother and a party of ladies who were going into northern Italy. The journey came at a time when it was not possible to get to Europe. Nannette was wretched at the thought of her separation of months which must ensue, but other wives went abroad and left their husbands at home, and she must please since she considered it one. Nannette was absent three months, and then Albert joined her and they returned at the expiration of another six weeks.

After that she went abroad every year for a period of three or four months, and her husband found the consequent expense too great to feel justified in sharing the homeward journey. So he patiently awaited her return, finding contentment in the thought that Nannette was happy. But one day, when she returned from her fourth sojourn abroad, he discovered that she was not so happy. She had been married eight years and the husband thought he understood his wife, playmate of his childhood, the comrade and companion of his mature life. But he could not understand the new phase of her. She was restless, petulant, silent, distrustful, and inclined to fits of weeping, for which she had no explanation. And then, suddenly, one day, he found her smiling, radiant and full of happy ecstasies. "Oh, Albert," she cried, "when you come and take me home I sat to bed for head of Madonna, has come to America and has opened a studio and will be along in a few days. He called this afternoon, and I asked him to dine with us to-morrow."

A strange chill passed over Albert as he listened; why, he could not tell. "Some one is walking over my grave," he said to himself, and when he recalled the conversation with his wife, he felt the entertainment of the guest with evident pleasure.

Signor Giovanni was a young man of 27, romantic in appearance, and having a striking resemblance to the famous "head of a Napoleon boy." Nannette seemed enraptured by his presence, and yet, deep-seated was the desire of Albert's life to see her return to the old life of his own heart. But of all roles he most desired that of a jealous husband. It was one he could never consent to play. He would be cordially thankful to Signor Giovanni, and tenderness to himself and to Nannette, well. Surely Nannette could not feel more than a passing fancy for this man, for a sentimental woman's enthusiasm for a foreign artist is a description. So the weeks slipped away into months, and Signor Giovanni was a constant caller at the house. And then one day in the early summer, when the town people were getting ready to fly away to the seaside, the country of foreign lands, Albert surprised him in tears, with a letter pressed to her lips.

"Here, little one," he said, soothingly, "be calm, and tell Albert all about it. Has he not always been your best friend? Do you love some one else better? Is that it?"

A new access of tears and sobs was the only reply. The pallor of Albert's face grew ghastly, but his eyes upon his wife's form only lightened and he stroked her golden hair softly, as if to soothe her. He had a long and she spoke again, "Nannette, from the hour I first saw you the one desire of my heart has been to make you happy. Do you not know, Albert, that I still retain that desire? He continued, "if you have found that you love some one else better than you love me, then some one else is far more necessary to your happiness than I am, surely I will not be an obstacle in your way. Only want you to be aware you are not making a mistake. We mortals are such complicated creatures we cannot always trust our own emotions. Would it not be well for you and Signor Giovanni to try a year of separation to test the durability of your sentiments? Sometimes our statements are wholly the result of physical magnetism. If you can remain apart until the current which your association set in motion exhausts itself—the infatuation dies a natural death and you awake as from a fever dream. Had you not better make the test?"

"But we did make it, and it was no use," cried Nannette. "We loved each other the moment we met last year, and when I came away it was as if death to both of us. We meant never to meet again; but he could not bear the separation—it was killing him, and he followed me and he was worse than ever. Oh, Albert, I was but a child when I married you—I do not know my own mind. How I love an woman, and I know I feel the loss of my life for this man—God help him, God help him!"

As she uttered these words she in her sorrow that she never saw the ghastly pallor that overspread her husband's face, the look of a wounded animal which came into his kind eyes, it was only of her own suffering she thought; and she threw herself face downward on a Turkish divan in a paroxysm of tears. Before Albert's vision as he stood gazing at her there rose the picture of that May morning when he had seen her for the first time, and he could recall with mingled distinctness the doll little patch of black on the face of the white cut which he had caught and given to Nannette to assure her grief, and make her happy. He recalled, too vividly, the reproving glances of the old nurse, who stood by him in silence.

Well, 23 years had gone since that May morning—23 years devoted in the main to the same effort—the effort to make up for Nannette's life, and give her the man whom she said she loved with the great passion of her womanhood. Even that could be done, must be done, to secure her happiness. It was all understood between them when they went abroad. After a year's time had elapsed she was to make her application for divorce, and it would be quickly granted. Albert's influence with judge and jury would arrange that. Nannette accepted the sacrifice as she had accepted all other sacrifices, in the thought that she was to have what she wanted—and satisfying herself with the thought that Albert's calm content.

Two years later a man with snow white hair and a seamed and furrowed face, sat in his lonely room and opened with trembling hands a letter bearing a foreign postmark. There were but a few lines in the letter and they ran thus: "Dear Albert: I am all alone—deserted—poor—ill, and unhappy. Will you come and take me home to die in your arms? I know you will—you were always so good—and this is the only happiness life has to offer. I have not seen you for years and my mind broke into wild sobs—the first of a lifetime of repression. Thank God, he cried, "thank God she is coming back to me!"

Love.

England's Army and Navy.

It was recently stated that England's army and navy is inadequate to properly defend the island, and it is believed that England is, in this instance, like the individual who is unable to defend himself against a powerful enemy through a shammy too weak to sustain him. The army is believed to be insufficient to meet the demands of the situation, the stomach being a failure, and the individual is believed to be unable to defend himself against a powerful enemy through a shammy too weak to sustain him. The army is believed to be insufficient to meet the demands of the situation, the stomach being a failure, and the individual is believed to be unable to defend himself against a powerful enemy through a shammy too weak to sustain him.

Try Grain-O! Try Grain-O!

At the present time, a package of GRAIN-O! is the new food drink that you can't get without. The children may drink it without sugar. You love some one else better? Is that it? A new access of tears and sobs was the only reply. The pallor of Albert's face grew ghastly, but his eyes upon his wife's form only lightened and he stroked her golden hair softly, as if to soothe her. He had a long and she spoke again, "Nannette, from the hour I first saw you the one desire of my heart has been to make you happy. Do you not know, Albert, that I still retain that desire? FROM DEATH'S DOOR.

Hilldale, Ill., April 29th.—Much interest has been aroused here over the case of William Marks, who has been in a dying condition for several months with apparently incurable Kidney Disease. The leading physicians of this place had pronounced his case a hopeless one, and others, including Dr. Byron Gensco, and Davenport, Jr., had attended him, and in a consultation decided that he could not live. In desperation, his nephew inquired of Mr. L. E. Giles, a local druggist, as to a last resort. Mr. Giles suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy which had just been introduced here. The results were marvellous. Mr. Marks immediately began to improve, and within a few weeks was able to be up and about, completely cured. His cure is the talk of the neighborhood, and is considered nothing short of a miracle. There appears to be no doubt that this new remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills, will cure any case of Kidney Disease, for the more malignant forms, such as Bright's Disease, Diets and Dropsy, yield readily to its remarkable influence. These forms of Chronic Kidney Disease have hitherto been considered incurable, and have baffled all medical skill, and yet, this new remedy has cured every single case in which it has been used, in a large number of instances. The patients themselves are amazed at the wonderful work Dodd's Kidney Pills are accomplishing in Rock Island County.

"How Don't Get the Blues!"

When a cheerful, brave and light-hearted woman is suddenly plunged into that perfection of misery, the blues, it is a sad picture. It is usually this way: She has been feeling out of sorts for some time, experiencing severe headache and backache; sleeps very poorly and is exceedingly nervous. Sometimes she is nearly overcome by faintness, dizziness, and palpitation of the heart; then that bearing-down feeling is dreadfully wearying. Her husband says, "Now, don't get the blues! You will be all right after you have taken the doctor's medicine." But she does not get all right. She grows worse day by day, until all at once she realizes that a distressing family complaint is established. Her doctor has made a mistake. She loses faith; hope vanishes; then comes the morbid, melancholy, everlasting blues. She should have been told just what the trouble was, but probably she withheld some information from the doctor, who, therefore, is unable to accurately locate her particular illness. Mrs. Pinkham has relieved thousands of women from just this kind of trouble, and now retains their grateful letters in her library as proof of the great assistance she has rendered them. This same assistance awaits every sick woman in the land.

Mrs. Winifred Allender's Letter.

"DEAR Mrs. PINKHAM—I feel it my duty to write and tell you of the benefit I have received from your wonderful remedies. Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I was in misery to myself and every one around me. I suffered terrible pain in my back, head, and right side, was very nervous, would cry for hours. Menses would appear sometimes in two weeks, then again not for three or four months. I was so tired and weak I could not sleep nights, sharp pains would dart through my heart that would almost make me to fall. My mother caused me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had no faith in it, but to please her I did so. The first bottle helped me so much that I continued its use. I am now well and weigh more than I ever did in my life."—MRS. WINIFRED ALLENDER, Farmington, Ill.

W. L. DOUGLAS $3 & $3.50 SHOES UNION MADE.

Our real worth of my $2.00 and $3.50 shoes compared with others is $1.00 to $2.00. It is all in the price. I have made my shoes in my own factory in Lowell, Mass. I make and sell more shoes than any other man in the world. My shoes are made of the best material and are guaranteed to last. I will pay $5.00 to any one who can show that my shoes are made of anything but the best material. W. L. DOUGLAS, Brockton, Mass.

If Your Wife

is nervous and your doctor's medicine does her no good, why don't you write to Dr. Greene about her and get his advice? This will not cost you anything, and it will probably be the means of making your wife a well woman. Dr. Greene's address is 35 W. 14th St., New York City. He is the discoverer of Dr. Greene's Nervura and has the greatest success curing nervousness in all its forms. It is no exaggeration to say that thousands of women and men have been made well through his counsel. Absolutely no charge for advice by mail.
