WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)
 WASHINGTON, March 23rd, 1903.
 The Anthracite Coal Strike Commission has made its awards and the President has caused them to be made public. By the terms of the agreement entered into between the operators and the miners, these awards stand until the 31st of March, 1904 and, therefore, danger of another coal famine is averted for that period. By the decision of the commission the miners will receive a general 10 per cent. increase in wages beginning with April of last year and continuing throughout the period. Moreover, if the average wholesale price of coal, pea size, goes above $1.50 per ton, the miners are to receive an increase of wages amounting to 1 per cent for each 5 cents increase. Men working 9 hours are, also, to be paid on a 10 hour basis. A "conciliation joint committee" is provided for in each mining district. It will be composed of three members appointed by the operators and three appointed by the miners and to it shall be referred all differences, while in the event that an agreement cannot be reached a seventh, who shall cast the deciding vote, shall be called in. The miners are allowed all the check weights they may demand but they are to pay them themselves. The operators are required to pay a commissioner who shall be appointed by a Circuit Judge and whose duty it shall be to determine the average wholesale price of coal. Among the general recommendations of the Commission are one recommending that the custom of employing special police shall be abolished and one urging that the existing child labor laws be enforced.

In view of the ratification of the Panama canal treaty the engineers are already figuring on the force that will be required to construct the canal. It is said that not less than 20,000 will be employed and at times this force may be doubled. There are now 1,000 men at work under the French company and every foot of the canal has been surveyed and ground broken. Two hospitals, fully equipped, are now maintained and doubtless will be during the entire construction of the canal. Assuming that no legal obstacles present themselves it is not believed that the actual work of construction will begin before the fall of 1904. American skilled labor and possibly some of the experienced French engineers will be employed but only negroes and preferably those who have been acclimated will be hired for the common labor.

The President has expressed himself as sorely disappointed at the postponement of actual reciprocity with Cuba for practically a year and is seriously contemplating calling Congress in extra session about Nov. 15, with a view to getting the Cuban legislation disposed of before the volume of legislation inevitable at the beginning of a regular session. Mr. Roosevelt is also disappointed at the failure of the Senate to act on the nominations of William Michael Byrne as United States Attorney for Delaware and of Dr. Crum the negro named for collector of the port of Charleston, S. C. Both of these nominations were sent in at the regular session and both were unfavorably reported by the committees to which they were referred. Both were sent in during the special session and the first was unfavorably reported by the Judiciary committee but the Commerce Committee refused to meet to consider the latter. The President has committed himself to the appointment of these two men unless formally turned down by the Senate, and he desired a vote of that body but failed to secure one. He has now made both appointments as recess nominations and the men will take office.

The President will go west on April 1, and hopes to secure, in the wilds of the Yellowstone Park, an absolute respite from all official cares and worries. He will take newspapermen on his special train but has requested that when he enters the Park they remain outside and permit him the two weeks undisturbed and unwatched vacation of which he feels himself in need. The proposed trip is a far reaching one. From the Yellowstone, Mr. Roosevelt will return to Saint Louis and be present at the dedicatory exercises of the Saint Louis Exposition and will then go to the Pacific coast practically the entire length of which he will traverse and on Decoration Day expects to deliver an address at Cheyenne, Wyoming. From there he will journey towards Washington making numerous stops and reaching here on June 6th.

Already the President is worried over what appears to be a serious blunder made by his friends with regard to his visit in Chicago. The date set for that visit is April 2 and on April 5 will occur the municipal election. For a man, thus far unexplained, reason the Mayor of Chicago, who is a candidate for reelection was not invited to be chairman of the reception committee and, although the President understood that his reception was to be entirely nonpartisan, it now transpires that only republicans have been invited to participate in his reception. The democratic mayor has attacked the President on the ground that he is coming to Chicago to help elect a republican mayor but the President has insisted on the mayor's being invited to participate in all the ceremonies attending his visit.

A somewhat sensational report has just been received at the War Department urging upon the Government the importance of increasing the strategic strength of the American Legation at Peking. While the report contains nothing which indicates a danger of an immediate uprising it states that in the event of such a catastrophe the Americans would be wholly unprotected, there being no armament at the Legation, aside from the small arms of the Guard, but two antiquated guns valuable only as ornamental relics. The American military officers say that Germany and other countries have not only increased their legations with stout steel fences capable of keeping at bay a mob armed with the usual weapons but they have created on the wall of the city, against which all the compounds about, block houses from which a loud and effective defense can be maintained. As there are many men, women and children who would be obliged to take refuge in the legation in the event of an uprising, the military authorities urge the advisability of Americans being authorized to take similar precautions.

 "To use an eighteenth century phrase this is an "over the top" tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. John E. Harmon, of Meigs Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadfully cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my neighbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon cured her. I heartily thank the manufacturer of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure within my reach. I cannot recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by J. V. Brockbridge.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE HOP-DANCE.

That Miss Merton should regard her cousin and her cousin's movement was not natural. On both their faces something unusual was written...

"What has happened?" Miss Merton asked. "Your cousin has had a terrible fright," said Rosseter, quickly.

"He passed and glanced at Miss Denmore. He had spoken thus that she might be saved an explanation if she did not feel that she could make one just then. She gave him a grateful look as she sank upon the seat before the spring.

"Mr. Rosseter!" called Miss Merton, presently. "Yes," he replied, swinging about and facing her.

"Will you walk back with me?" "Certainly, if you wish it."

"It would be so good of you," said Miss Denmore. "I am not quite sure of myself."

"Miss Merton glanced one side of Miss Denmore and Rosseter upon the other, they slowly climbed the slope towards the orchard. For some moments nothing was said.

"Will you tell me how you chanced to be in the wood?" she asked. "I had strolled down from the house with a newspaper and magazine which Mr. Parmelee lent me."

"Don't explain, don't now!" interrupted Miss Merton, and Rosseter added a gentle remonstrance.

"Yes," said Miss Denmore, "I must, then we'll not refer to it again. I was watching the water ripple away into the wood when I fancied I heard a footstep. I was so startled that I sprang up, and there was that man. He could not have been more than 20 feet from me, but I crept up so noiselessly that he never saw me."

tion; "there was some scuffling between myself and Miss Denmore's pursuer, who finally stumbled and struck his head against a tree, where we left him unconscious."

"Dance!" cried Rosseter in bewilderment. Was the girl making game of him? Apparently not, for she seemed wholly in earnest.

"Then we shall feel very much delighted if you do not dance now, if you do neglect us," she added.

"I am sure Mr. Rosseter is not uncontented to slight his friends," said Miss Denmore.

"I have danced in a number of years, and I began Rosseter. He had heard the gayer of the following night talked about among a number of the younger pickers."

"The three were now walking on, and the observant pickers noted that they paused as they came to the hop-kick."

"I should not dream of mentioning the matter unless you wished it," Rosseter said, with a grave salutation he left them.

"As he had walked by Miss Denmore's side he had determined that as soon as he saw the girls in safety to the house, he would make a paramee what had happened, and with him, and perhaps Joe Beaufort, or some other, return to the wood in search of the vagrant had recovered and taken himself off. But he now recognized an excuse, and he was desirous that the affair be kept quiet."

"Towards evening Mr. Merton came to the hop-dance, and upon his stream of grateful and, to Rosseter, embarrassing praise for his conduct, it was only when he profane denunciations were very far from the wailer began to feel uncomfortable in his presence. Gratitude in any form, as has been previously indicated, had become very far from being accustomed to. Whenever he was able to render a service it was given, but to that little anyone in general, he did not care to be known as one of the man's most attractive characteristics. Yet in time gone by."

"During the next two days appeared Miss Merton nor her cousin appeared in the hop-dance, and as they were coming from dinner, Rosseter chanced to see the former standing alone upon the porch, and ventured to address her."

"She's feeling much better today," Miss Merton said. "Sunday night we were very anxious about you, and the next day of the fever from which she recently recovered, but I'm sure there's no danger now, and we'll not be about shouting 'Hop-pole!' to you and your maid."

"Your holiday's over now," said Joe Beaufort, near whom he chanced to be standing, with a little grin, "but I don't s'pose you mind."

"Rosseter laughed good-humoredly, and hastened away to have a pole in readiness for the returning pickers. Indeed, he did not mind. Quite the contrary, though he would hardly admit it to himself, the hours had many of them dragged sadly to him."

"Both girls greeted him with frank friendliness, and though he endeavored to avoid their former reserve, neither of them would do so. Miss Denmore seemed quite herself, and as for Miss Merton, she was in the best of gay moods."

"Of course you've heard about the hop-dance," she exclaimed. "It's to be one of the largest we have ever had. I'm sure you've heard of it, and you're very curious about it. You're familiar with hop-dances, I suppose."

chasing to a pleasant-faced maiden who called Hintonville her home, and then, ere he realized it, he was upon the floor dancing. It came to him naturally, and when there was a general change to a bar of waltz music they were engaged in a quadrille and the others waltzed, he followed suit, and with his vis-a-vis, who chanced to be Miss Merton.

"You must let me thank you," she said. "And to think that you tried to make out that you were 'rusty'! Why, one would imagine you did not dance at all."

"If it's true that men are deceivers ever," she returned, "women are certainly flatterers ever."

Once the ice was broken, Rosseter enjoyed himself thoroughly. Miss Merton's friends apparently ignored his rough grab, and after a little passed away.

Swamp Land Decision. Secretary Hitchcock has decided the question affecting the Minnesota swamp lands which has been pending since early in 1902. At that time State Auditor Dunn through T. E. Byrnes of Minneapolis, had applied for a change in the rule for the adjustment of the swamp lands grant to Minnesota.

They found a seat that was unoccupied. He himself in a large measure forgot it. Joe Beaufort occasionally observed him with a mingled admiration and wonder, and so the evening was not very strong, you know."

Between eleven and midnight refreshments were served—newer and older of Mrs. Merton's unapproachable doughnut and waffle repast was in progress Rosseter managed to absent himself, though when the music struck up he was again on hand to see what was going on for running away. He had danced twice with Miss Denmore, and now ventured to ask her to favor him for a third time. Money-musk had just been blown.

"Will you not wait for a quadrille or the lancers?" she suggested. "I should like to rest a little longer. I'm not very strong, you know."

"He lingered at her side for a moment, not seeming to be inclined to seek another partner."

"I will do what I can," said Rosseter simply. "I didn't quite understand."

"Thank you," and her smile carried more real joy to him than any other she had received. It seemed to him, since he could recall, the evening came, and all preparations for the gayer of the dance had been made. The three large hop-houses were cleared and the room lighted with lamps and lanterns. About the walls festoons of hops had been hung, a small platform erected for the musicians, and seats placed for the dancers when they were not on the floor. Before eight o'clock the music was begun, and a celloist, arrived at a quarter of nine, and two or three adjacent fairs drove up in large hop-wagons. Then shortly Miss Merton and her party from Hintonville appeared, and by half-past eight the dancing was in full swing.

Rosseter did not join in the merit at the outset, but stood in the background, near the door watching with not a little amusement, the antics of some of the rustics. Several men would occasionally launch into sort of a frolic, and when some of their energetic efforts, usually in excellent time, would be heard above the combined shuffle of all other feet.

"The Boy That Was Wanted. A Philadelphia physician who is something of a wag, and a fair ventriloquist besides, recently was in need of the services of a boy, and wanted one of nerve. He inserted an advertisement in the daily papers, and each applicant was shown to a private apartment where there was a full-sized skeleton of a human frame mounted on a bed of porridge. The doctor explained to one of the duties of the boy was to feed the skeleton each day with the porridge. Some immediately declined; others took the spoon in hand and poured the porridge into the mouth. The doctor, however, selected himself, and the skeleton seemed to gurgle, 'Ugh-h, but it's hot!' This, in a dozen cases, was the signal for a wild scream in the doctor's face, and he fled in a flying glance at a rapidly disappearing figure. At last a sturdy little Irish chap presented himself. When his turn came he performed his duty, repeated 'Ugh-h, but it's hot,' said the skeleton. The boy never minded. Why don't you blow on it, ye scoundrel? The boy had secured the position."

MINNESOTA NEWS. LEGISLATIVE SUMMARY.

The Transactions of the lawmakers at the 45th Session of the Legislature of the Regular Session. St. Paul, March 19.—By a vote of 46 to 17, the senate yesterday passed the bill providing the use of trading stamps.

The normal schools at Manhattan, Moorhead and Duluth are abolished in a bill introduced by Senator John C. Schuch of Marshall. The measure provides that the school and all standing appropriations for their maintenance shall terminate on the general fund July 1, 1922.

Although the great portion of the afternoon was devoted to a consideration of general orders, and a great deal of "progress" was reported, little was done by the lawmakers at the session.

The house refused to pass the resolution to adjourn April 15, but passed the bill introducing a bill to amend the constitution and to leave the houses under a bill for the purpose of amending the constitution. The measure was introduced a bill for the purpose of amending the constitution, and the bill was passed by a vote of 46 to 17.

The house yesterday passed the Dowsy bill, which authorizes the state to purchase the boundaries under the law of 1886 to sue the owners of the land. The bill was passed by a vote of 46 to 17.

Golden Dyke Mining Company.

MINES LOCATED IN

Idaho County, State of Idaho.

Would you like to have an interest in the Treadwell Gold Mine, the greatest dividend-payer in the world? If so, you have to pay $185.00 for one share of stock, because that is the actual value of it, based on the dividends paid. When the Treadwell mine offered stock for the purpose of erecting a treating plant it was at a few cents a share, and gradually advanced as the equipment was increased until the present high price was attained.

The property of the Treadwell Company is an immense body of gold-bearing quartz carrying values of $1.81 per ton, located on Douglas Island, Alaska. This quartz is mined and milled for 87 cents a ton, thus leaving less than a dollar a ton profit, but they treat thousands of tons a day.

The Golden Dyke Mining Company owns a body of quartz in Idaho county, Idaho, fully double the size of the Great Treadwell mine, and the values are fully 300 per cent greater. Like the quartz of the great Treadwell mine, the Golden Dyke quartz can be treated for less than one dollar per ton, leaving a profit of six dollars a ton, or over six times what is derived from the Treadwell quartz, which means that the Golden Dyke stock is worth six times what the Treadwell is worth.

In order to place the Golden Dyke on the same basis as the Treadwell it is necessary to equip it with a treatment plant, and for this purpose an introductory block of stock will be offered to the public at 10 cents the share; second small block at 15 cents, and so on.

This Is It.

We have a mountain of gold ore above the surface containing about 4,000,000 tons all ready for the mill; from 50 assays it averages $7.29 per ton. All we need is a plant to treat this vast body of ore. This is why our proposition is certain and definite.

The Kendall mine, which was sold the last of February for $10,000,000, was bought three years ago for $650; same character of ore, same treatment averages $7.00, cost to mine and treatment $3,000,000 worth of ore in sight.

The Golden Dyke has over $28,000,000 worth of ore in sight.

The Kendall mine had to build five miles of flume to get water for operating their plant.

The Golden Dyke mine has ample water power 820 feet from the mine.
