WENT UP IN SMOKE.

The Barn and Wood Shed Belonging to J. W. Hunt, Destroyed by Fire.

At about 2:30 o'clock on Sunday morning the village was aroused by the cries of fire, and the fire bell and whistle were sounded to arouse the slumbering firemen and citizens. When the firemen arrived at the scene of the fire both the large barn, a wood shed and a store house were in flames, and the barn on the F. E. Smith property, which is rented by Mrs. Labodny, was also on fire. The sparks from the burning buildings were setting fire to the Hunt residence but this was soon given a good wetting which put an end to all fear of any damage from fire in that direction. The fire ladies attention was turned toward the Smith barn over which the flames were playing, but a well directed stream of water soon made that building safe from fire for the time being. Several remarks were made to the effect that it would be impossible to save the Smith barn, but these several minds were soon changed. J. W. Hunt erected this barn but a few years ago together with a wood shed and store room where he kept his camping equipment among which were quite a number of shakets that Mr. Hunt used when in the Klondike country, and a large amount of the family's winter clothing which was all consumed. The barn was a good one and was in first-class repair, for only about a year ago it was given a fresh coat of paint and an addition was built. The barn contained several heating stoves, two bicycles, lumber and shingles, a kit of carpenter tools, and numerous other articles all of which were destroyed.

The origin of the fire is unknown. Some think it was the work of an incendiary, while others advance the idea that it was caused by the presence of tramps in the barn. None of the Hunt family had been in the barn since the more before and then only for a short time. The doors to the building were never kept locked and could have been easily entered by anyone, but standing as it did in the southwest corner of the lot it does not seem that a tramp would go across the lot to get inside. We are of the opinion that the fire was started by some miserable scoundrel, for when first seen the flames were coming out of the southwest corner of the building and at the same time a fairly good wind was blowing from that direction, which looks as though the party that set it (if any one did) knew the business and intended making a clean sweep.

The loss to Mr. Hunt will be between six and seven hundred dollars with an insurance of only two hundred dollars.

Will Hold a Camp Fire.

Tuesday, the 2nd of November, the members of B. F. Davis Post, No. 137, will hold a Camp Fire in Rath's Hall. Dr. Mahan, Commander of the State Department, of St. Paul, and John Day, of Minneapolis, will be present to deliver addresses. These gentlemen are among the best public speakers in the state and their presence alone should draw a large crowd to the meeting, which will be public and free to all. Supper will be served by the ladies of the G. A. R. and this should be well patronized as the ladies are noted for their culinary ability. After the speaking in the evening, a dance will be given for the benefit of those who enjoy stepping the light fantastic, and this we are sure will be largely attended by the younger element in town. In fact a gala time is promised by the old veterans, and all should try to bring about the success of the undertaking which is to occur on the evening of November 3rd. Commander J. E. Netser requests the presence of every old soldier in these parts so as to be re-enlisted and enjoy the company of each others presence once more.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

On Friday, the 14th inst. in response to invitations sent out, a large concourse of friends assembled at the residence of D. Grandt on the Government road, to witness the ceremony of the reunion of Mr. and Mrs. Hans Rodeamacher, who celebrated their golden wedding on the above date. According to an old German custom the wedding ceremony is performed over again. Rev. Schulz, of the German Lutheran church, officiated and the ceremony took place at 3 o'clock p. m.

Mr. and Mrs. Rodeamacher were married in Holstine, Sagaburg, Germany on the 14th day of October, 1853. They lived together in their mother country until 23 years ago, and where thirteen children were born to them all of whom died except one daughter, Mrs. Dudliff Grandt. Mr. and Mrs. Rodeamacher are 76 and 74 years of age and are enjoying fairly good health. After arriving in this country they settled on a farm near Chicago where they resided until last spring, when they sold out their home and came here to spend their last days with their only child.

After the wedding ceremonies were over with a beautiful supper was served, and dancing commenced. The old but "newly" wedded couple opened the dance and they seemed to enjoy it as much as anyone could. The party departed for their several homes at an early hour in the morning after wishing the aged couple many more years of health and enjoyment in their wedded life.

Among those in attendance were Henry Grandt and wife, of Chicago. Mr. Grandt is a cousin of Dudliff and this was the first time he ever was in this part of the country and was well pleased with the looks of our prosperous village and the surrounding country.

Yours deeply indebted,

Work is about to be started on Alaska's first railway. It will be known as the Alaskan railway. When completed this road will save three weeks of the journey from the Alaskan ports to the states. The promoters believe it will attract many enterprising young settlers to Southern and Central Alaska, where experiments have shown that practically anything cultivated in our northern states will grow.

St. Louis parrots are picking up English under a new instructor. The phonograph. The trumpet is directed to the student and the machine is turned on. A phonograph interests a parrot just as much as a human being, or, say a dog. The result is that they sit there in most respectful attention, and the constant repetition of words excites them to repeat the language much faster than parrots acquire it by the old method.

Of all the foreign-born population in the United States, 52.9 per cent are of the English-Teutonic stock and 20.9 per cent are Celts. Thus practically three-fourths of the foreign-born in the United States are of English-Teutonic and Celtic stocks. Hence, bearing in mind that the English people were created by the amalgamation of Teutonic and Celtic blood, it is reasonable that the American people will ever be anything but essentially English.

The value of the annual egg product of the United States exceeds that of the combined gold and silver output of the country. The poultry and eggs raised and eaten in the United States last year were worth more than all the gold or the silver produced in the world in the same year. These are a few of the interesting features about the poultry business that have been unearthed by one of Secretary Wilson's experts in the department of agriculture.

The Fulton-street merchants in Brooklyn have petitioned the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Co. to have special trolley cars assigned for the use of their employees at the time for closing the stores at 6 o'clock. Within a few blocks of the borough about 5,000 saleswomen are employed by the department stores. The merchants want the company to have from 50 to 75 cars waiting for their accommodation in the vicinity of the hall. The employees want to march from the stores in a body.

There are wonderful possibilities in the new mineral called radium. Its industrial application is somewhat restricted by the extremely limited supply of radium available, but it is stated that a small fraction of an ounce, properly employed, would probably produce a good light sufficient for several rooms and would require renewal during the present century. It has been calculated that the energy stored up in one gram of radium is sufficient to raise 600 tons weight a mile high.

The rural food delivery service will require from the next congress at least $20,000,000, a larger appropriation than has ever before been allowed for it. Last session there was allowed $12,000,000. Notwithstanding the embarrassments of the pending post office investigation the rural service, there is no disposition among influential post office department officials or with members of congress to allow the system to suffer, especially since it has been secured in the administration of the large appropriations that have been furnished by congress.

About as proud a boy as there is in the entire Adirondack region is little Dick Stoen, an 11-year-old New York boy who shot and killed a bear. With his mother, Mrs. John Noble Stoen, the little New Yorker is a guest of the Adirondack League Club, and it was near the Coombs Spring salubrious of this organization that the youthful hunter laid little Dick's Adirondack trophy, a bear with the boy when the bear was killed. He says the animal was 190 yards away from the boy when the shot was fired.

TO THE MEMORY OF GEN. SHERMAN

Magnificent Monument to the Famous Soldier is Unveiled at Washington.

President Roosevelt Veters a Tribute of Verses to the Dead Warrior—Also Last Year's Increase of the Civil War—His Faith in Citizens of United States.

Washington, Oct. 16.—To the memory of William Tecumseh Sherman an equestrian statue was unveiled here yesterday by a little boy, William Tecumseh Sherman Thornycroft, grandson of the dead chieftain, in the presence of official Washington, the president, the diplomatic corps and all the members of the societies of the Armies of the Cumberland, the Tennessee, the Ohio and the Potomac, and all the regular troops in the vicinity of Washington were present. Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, president of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee and chair of the regular troops in the vicinity of Washington were present. Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, president of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee and chair of the regular troops in the vicinity of Washington were present. Gen. Grenville M. Dodge, president of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee and chair of the regular troops in the vicinity of Washington were present.

Address of the President. President Roosevelt spoke in part as follows: In opening, the president eulogized the generals of the civil war, and said there was a peculiar fitness in commemorating the great deeds of the soldiers who preserved this nation by their noble monuments at the national capital. Continuing he said: "The living can best show their respect for the memory of the great dead by the way in which they take to heart and act upon the lessons taught by the lives which made these dead men great. Our homage to-day to the memory of Sherman comes from the depths of our being. We are not unworthy citizens did we not feel profound gratitude toward him, and those like him, and under him, who, when the country called in her time of need, sprang forward with such gallant eagerness to answer that call."

Show Homage in Deeds. "Moreover, our homage to-day not only did express our own lips; it must also show itself forth in our deeds. It is a great and glorious thing for a nation to be stirred to present triumph by the splendid memories of triumphs in the past. But it is a shameful thing for a nation, if these memories stir it only to empty boasts. We must show by our lives that we have learned aright the lessons taught by the men who did the mighty deeds of the past."

Our Army and Navy. He lauded the virtues which made the men of '61 to '65 great in war, and said: "If we are to be true to our patriotism, there will be no let up in the work of building, and of keeping at the highest point of efficiency, a navy suited to our needs. Our Army and Navy must hereafter play in the world, and of making and keeping our small regular army, which in the event of a great war can never be brought but the nucleus around which our volunteer armies must form themselves, the best army of its size to be found among the nations of the world."

Depends Upon Ourselves. "In the long run, then, it depends upon ourselves, upon us, the people, as a whole, whether this government is or is not to stand in the future as it has stood in the past; and my faith that it will show no falling off is based upon my belief in the character of our citizenship. The one supreme duty is to try to keep this average high. To this end it is well to keep alive the memory of those men who are fit to serve as examples of what is loftiest and best in American citizenship."

The ceremonies closed with the benediction pronounced by Rt. Rev. Henry Yates Satterlee, bishop of Washington. Post Office Robber Sentenced. Chester, Ill., Oct. 15.—Walter Hiatt, notorious post office robber, has been sentenced in the United States district court to a term of ten years in the penitentiary at Chester, for robbing the post office at Towanda and New Baden. CIVIL FEDERATION.

National Organization Meets in Chicago to Strive for a Definite Plan to Prevent Strikes.

Chicago, Oct. 15.—The "open-shop" question was the chief topic of discussion at the opening session of the National Civil Federation in Snelway hall yesterday. President John Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers, urged the rights of union men to refuse to work with nonunion men. Thomas Woodcock, editor of the Wall Street Journal, New York, argued against it.

Chicago, Oct. 17.—Before the National Civil Federation conference T. K. Webster, a Chicago manufacturer employing hundreds of men, won hearty approval by a declaration in favor of the eight-hour day and by enforcing the union demand for that concession. Socialism and its advocates were rebuked by labor leaders and capitalists by George Koop being elected to the presidency. Several interesting papers were read.

Chicago, Oct. 19.—A banquet on Saturday evening closed the sessions of the Civil Federation conference. Senator Hanna pleaded for honest purposes and fairness in all negotiations between labor and capital. James H. Bechtel declared that if organized capital organized labor denies rights to individual it violated the law. Samuel Gompers said that all expressions of anger were apt to be expressed while kind words and thoughts were most likely to take root and resympathy for the cause of labor, declared it every man's duty to do his best for the promotion of industrial peace.

MURDERER LYNCHED.

Man Takes Slayer of a Little Child from Jail in Montana and Hangs Him.

Hamilton, Mont., Oct. 15.—Walter Jackson, the convicted murderer of Fannie Buck, a six-year-old boy, was taken from the county jail here late at night by a mob and lynched. The identity of the mob leaders is unknown. Thirty-five minutes after the lynching Jackson's body was taken down by the sheriff and coroner and removed to the morgue. The murder of little Fannie Buck was a peculiarly atrocious crime. What the boy's body was found it was horribly mutilated. Suspicion pointed to Jackson and when he was arrested a lynching was narrowly averted. His trial quickly followed and a verdict was returned within two hours. He was sentenced to be hanged, but his attorneys appealed to the supreme court.

BIG VICTORY FOR UNCLE SAM

The Alaskan Boundary Dispute Decided by Tribunal in Favor of United States.

Every Claim But One Is Conceded—Canada Is Granted the Portland Canal—What America Gains—The Dominion Is Strifed to Deep Anger at the Decision.

London, Oct. 19.—The Alaskan boundary commission Saturday reached an agreement whereby all the American contentions are satisfied, with the exception of those in relation to the Portland canal, which Canada wins. All that now remains to be done is for the commissioners to affix their signatures to the decision and complete the map which will accompany it. On the map will be marked the boundary line definitely fixing the division of American and British territory, on such a basis that no American citizen will lose a foot of land he already believed he held, while the United States will get all the waters to the rich Alaskan territory.

THE SHERMAN STATUE AT WASHINGTON.

It is a magnificent work of art which has been in course of construction for several years. The design was by Carl Hahn-Smith, but he died before the statue was completed, and it was finished under the direction of his wife. The statue stands just south of the treasury building, and is visible the whole length of Pennsylvania avenue, the most conspicuous site in Washington.

With the exception of the Portland canal, which gives Canada the one outlet she so much needed.

By a majority of one, Lord Alveston, chief justice of England, delivered the deciding vote, the commission confirms the United States in its title to all the land and every waterway and inlet it claimed, except the Portland canal, which Canada gets as its only outlet to the sea.

Canada in a Rage. Toronto, Oct. 19.—The decision was stirred into a tumult by official announcement that the Alaskan boundary tribunal had rendered a decision giving a sweeping victory to the United States. Campbell, Edward Morris, James Simmons.

Care Are Televised. Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 20.—The Rock Island limited, east-bound, crashed into an extra freight train, west-bound, while passing through a tunnel west of the city, Sunday. A dozen persons were injured slightly, but none was seriously hurt. The conductor and engineer of the passenger train leaped and sustained slight injuries. About 30 persons were in the dining car when the shock came. The impact was terrific and the tables were upset and the dishes smashed. Many persons were struck in the face and on their heads. The passenger engine was turned over on its side and in a collision which occurred Saturday on the Belvidere division of the Pennsylvania Railroad company near Washington's Crossing. The persons killed and injured were laborers who were on a work train and were on their way to Washington's Crossing to prepare a washout along the road. The railroad authorities here are anxious as to how the accident occurred, but it is believed that the gravel train either failed to see any adverse signal or that the flagman of the first train failed to go back a sufficient distance.

SWEEP BY FLAMES.

Best Part of the City of Aberdeen, Wash., Destroyed by Fire Which Causes $1,000,000 Loss.

Aberdeen, Wash., Oct. 17.—Fire that burned from nine Friday morning until two o'clock in the afternoon caused four deaths and destroyed property valued at approximately $1,000,000. It practically wiped out the main business street of this town, which is built almost entirely of wood.

The dead are: Charles Taffo, Daniel Webster, Calvin McKenzie and an unknown man. Not more than one-half of the lost is covered by insurance, for the reason that the insurance companies have refused to carry any greater risk on account of the inflammable material of which all the buildings in Aberdeen are constructed. Every business man in the city is a loser. In order to stop the further progress of the flames, dynamite was used on several of the buildings, upon which the flames were advancing. Telephone messages brought the fire departments of Hohulian and Montesano to the scene, and about fifty firemen were there. The fire started at nine o'clock in the morning, and it was two p. m. before the flames were brought under control.

Aberdeen has a population of about 7,000, and the chief industry is lumbering. Several large sawmills are located near the town, but the fire did not reach them.

TO REDEEM NEW YORK.

Dr. Dowle, with a Large Band of His Followers, Begins a Crusade in the Big City. Chicago, Oct. 15.—With a speech, a prayer, an admonition and a pose before a score of cameras, John Alexander Dowle departed from Zion City on his crusade to New York, promising afternoon, himself and his cabinet, the guard of the restoration host of almost 3,200 people who preceded him by a few hours.

New York, Oct. 19.—Fifty thousand persons were turned away from Madison Square garden Sunday afternoon after all the seats in this building had been filled with a great crowd coming to hear John Alexander Dowle, on his first appearance before a New York audience. Fully 1,400 persons were in the garden at halfpast two o'clock when the services began.

New York, Oct. 20.—After attending an early service in Madison Square Garden John Alexander Dowle's "Restoration Host," numbering nearly 4,000, began Monday a house to house canvass of the city. Before giving them his final instructions, Dr. Dowle said: "I am going out to do a little restoration work myself and I won't be far from Wall Street. Pray for me."

Points Out Dangers. He hinted at the danger that is a "growing disregard for the restraints of law," and, lastly, "complaints of imaginary or exaggerated suffering in our financial policies furnish an excuse for the flippant exploitation of all sorts of monetary nostrums."

He declared that the government of the United States was made by and for patriotic, unselfish, sober-minded people, that it was suited to such people. He added that for those who are selfish, corrupt, and unparitric it was the worst government on earth.

His creed, he said, should uphold the interests of labor and advocate its fair treatment, but should strictly forbid its interference with those contented with their toil, and its attempts to force compliance with its demands by violent disturbances of peace and good order.

Urges Rescue of the Political Body from the Infiltration of Corrupt Influence—Speaks Plainly of American People, But Is Hopeful of the Future.

He pleaded for pure politics and the integrity of the political body, and summoned all good men of every party to join their efforts to that end.

"Taking 'American Good Citizenship' as his subject," the ex-president warned his hearers that the prevailing sense of the security of the republic and the permanency of its institutions was the present greatest danger to the nation. It was a danger that he brought to attention to what he termed the "canker" which was eating its way into the body politic.

Avoids Partnership. Under bond, as he said, to "keep the peace and not talk politics," Mr. Cleveland evaded partnership, but with keen sarcasm for the argument of those who were "too busy" to take part in politics and with a calm eloquence in presenting the duty of every citizen he brought to attention in the form of hearty applause.

"It is time there should be an end to self-satisfied gratification or pretense of virtue on the part of the politician," said the ex-president, "and it is time to forbid the prostitution of the word to a sinister use. Every citizen should be sufficiently enlightened to bring himself within the true meaning of the term, as one who concerns himself with the regulation or government of a nation or with the preservation of its safety, peace and prosperity."

Hopeful for the Future. Mr. Cleveland spoke plainly of the weakness of the American people to-day, as he sees them. While giving a warning that pitfalls are on every hand, he spoke cheerfully of the future. But he asserted that if good men are to interfere with the machinations of the blood-thirsty politician they need not look for an open field or an easy victory.

Among the immediate ills which he believed assailed the governmental body, he said that "corruption of our suffrage, open and notorious," was one of the most serious. He placed "the purchase of political favors and privileges and the traffic in official duty for personal gain." Mr. Cleveland also lamented that the indifference of many citizens allowed these ills to increase and spread. A result, he said, of the strengthening of "wholesale national sentiment" and "characteristic indignation of the proper relations between labor and capital."

Points Out Dangers. He hinted at the danger that is a "growing disregard for the restraints of law," and, lastly, "complaints of imaginary or exaggerated suffering in our financial policies furnish an excuse for the flippant exploitation of all sorts of monetary nostrums."

He declared that the government of the United States was made by and for patriotic, unselfish, sober-minded people, that it was suited to such people. He added that for those who are selfish, corrupt, and unparitric it was the worst government on earth.

His creed, he said, should uphold the interests of labor and advocate its fair treatment, but should strictly forbid its interference with those contented with their toil, and its attempts to force compliance with its demands by violent disturbances of peace and good order.

SOME DIPLOMATIC CHANGES

Interesting Figures from the Morgue of the Post Office Department—Stupendous Tasks Performed by Some Government Officials.

Washington—Over at the post office department there is a place called the Morgue. That is the uniquely appropriate name commonly applied to the dead letter office—the "dead letters" that go astray in the mails.

Few people have an adequate conception of the amount of business that is transacted in this establishment, but the annual report of First Assistant Postmaster General William J. ...

A Rose for Life. The official keeper of the Morgue, contains some interesting information. It appears that during the year just closed no less than 19,152,146 pieces of mail found their way into the dead house. That was $54,796 more pieces than were reported during the previous year—$5,000 a day in and year out, and the number constantly increasing.

A little over one-third of this number was delivered unopened. That means that the mailed letters that are needed in deciphering more than 300,000 apparently unintelligible addresses and starting them on their way again. The clerks found 426,674 pieces of misdirected letters which were opened, and drafts, checks and money orders representing a face value of $1,492,583. Some of this money was finally delivered to the persons for whom it was intended, but the larger portion went to swell the postal receipts.

To handle this business there are 125 clerks, and some of them are marvels in the skill with which they can decipher writing that apparently has no meaning. The most skillful of all of them is a woman who draws a salary of $1,800 a year. There are few chronological enigmas which she cannot master.

Mourns the Loss of Herbert.

In the unexpected death of Sir Michael Herbert Washington loses the most charming diplomat who has ever been detailed to represent a foreign country here as an ambassador.

Sir Michael had been in Washington as the British ambassador less than a year, and yet he had won a popularity that amounted to affection. He was gentle, cultured, magnetic, and fascinating in manner. Although an Englishman to the finger tips, he had yet an instinctive understanding of American ways and a sympathy with Yankee ideas and practices which gained for him a cordial regard everywhere he went.

Perhaps the fact that he was married to an American wife had not so very much to do with it, but that was not all, Sir Michael was genuinely, heartily, spontaneously, sympathetic and kindly. It is hardly conceivable that Great Britain could send another ambassador here who can win so high a place in so short a time. It is only a little more than a year since Sir Julian Pauncefote disappeared from the scene after thirteen years of service in Washington, and there were many men who thought that sturdy old English squire had made a record which could never be equalled; but Sir Michael was already on the road to winning a place in Washington which even Sir Julian never occupied.

The British ambassador in America is a far more important personage now than the British minister was 20 years ago. Great Britain now feels it incumbent upon her to send her very best man, and the Washington embassy is regarded as the prize assignment in the entire diplomatic service. It is not so very long ago that it was regarded as something of a humiliation for a British diplomat to be sent here; but things have changed mightily of late.

Diplomatic Changes.

Diplomatic Washington is also to lose Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador. Count de Cassini has been here several years, and he has the reputation of being one of the most accomplished diplomats in Europe; but somehow it seems that there he has always had the ill fortune to be mixed up in a scandal which he is assigned. At the time of the ...

WILL PAINT HIS YACHT WHITE

King Edward Much Impressed with Appearance of Hohenzollern Craft.

King Edward's journey on the royal yacht in the Mediterranean impressed him with the superiority of white paint over black for the Victoria and Albert. He was greatly pleased by the appearance of several cream-colored yachts. He has decided that the Victoria and Albert shall be like the Kaiser's Hohenzollern yacht, now being painted white. According to present arrangements the King and Queen will join the Victoria and Albert at Portsmouth harbor on Friday, July 13. They are to proceed to Coles for regatta week. The yacht will afterward convey their majesties to Ireland and thence to Scotland. Early in September the Victoria and Albert will convey the queen from Aberdeen to Copenhagen. The royal yacht has been taken to Portsmouth dockyard for an overhauling. She will be fitted with water-tight compartments, an arrangement which will enable her to pass through the Kiel canal.

SUBSTITUTE FOR RUBBER.

Scotch Expert Claims to Have a Process for the Tanning of Hog Hides.

John Muir, of John Muir & Sons, Beth, Scotland, claims to have invented a process for tanning hog hides so as to make them a perfect substitute for rubber in cushion tires for vehicles. He says the process makes the skin much more durable and equally satisfactory.

Muir has just been in New York, where he says he sold American rights to the process to a syndicate. He says a demonstrating plant will be erected immediately. A factory will then be built to supply the demand, which is expected to be large. Similar rights have already been sold for Germany, Austria-Hungary, Switzerland and other European countries.

Muir claims that it is of immediate and general recognition of his invention, which, he asserts, is cheaper and better than rubber.

Monkey Was Horrified.

A naturalist who has traveled in the East Indies says: "The effect on the monkeys of man's appearance is most interesting. The expression of their emotions is certainly almost human as they sit and stare at him, laughing and making wild gestures and contemning, drawing back their heads and throwing the hand before the face with a gesture of abhorrence and other movements indicative of shocked and outraged feelings. But predominant is the expression of absolute horror, which, coming from the monkeys, connotes that wild degraded cousins, is of our superiority very aggravating."

THE OLD HOME CREEK.

If I could have my way
You bet I'd have my name
Things fixed on every holiday
I'd make my birthday
I'd like to simply bring 'em up
All of 'em in one row
An' go and spend my dollar
Down along the old home creek
The cut an' older limb
An' sit a wren on a pine limb
A long an' thin an' strong
An' humb the notes an' notes
Or some blue little bird
An' car along the old home creek
Where black-birds shoo the bees
Oh, look for 'em up
My holidays, you know
An' they'll laugh say 'em up
'Til it would overflow
For all the rest of my long year
I'd make my birthday day
Give me my holidays in spring
When buds are 'bout 'em
I want to trot away
Down the old home creek
An' hear the song an' humb
An' whistle like a meekin' bird
An' humb the notes an' notes
An' 'est see Lewis' foot o' song
The white I had

A Daughter of the Sioux

CHAPTER XX.
In the hush of the wintry night, under a leaden sky, with snowflakes falling thick and fast, and under the hills in fleecy white, Webb's column had halted among the sturdy pines, the men exchanging muttered, low-toned queries and comments, the horses standing with bowed heads, occasionally pawing the soft coverlet and sniffing curiously at this familiar barrier to the bunch grass they sought in vain. They had feasted together, these comrade troopers and chargers ere the sun went down—the men on a ration of rations of agency bacon, four and brown sugar, found with black tailed deer and mountain sheep in abundance in the captured village, and food cut by supplies from the pack train—the officers on big "blanks" of oats set before them by sympathetic friends and masters. When the skies were fairly dark, Webb had ordered little fires lighted all along the bank of the stream, leaving the men of Kay's and Billings' troops to themselves, blowing through the long night watches to create the impression among the lurking Sioux that the whole force was still there, guarding the big village it had captured in the early afternoon, and then, in silence, the troopers had scuttled and jogged away into the heart of the hills, close on the heels of their Guides.

There had been little time to look over the captures. The main interest of both officers and men, of course, centered in Mr. Hey, who was found in one of the tepees, prostrate from illness and had traded from fever and strong mental excitement. He had later tidings from Frayne, it seems, than the quiet "mountain" could assure them of the health and safety of their wives and little ones, but would not tell them what was ailing in his quarters, and when a significant question he asked: Did any of them know this new Maj. "Linn"? No? Well, God help Linn, they'd deliver him up to the Indians' delicious whisped Webb, and rode away in that conviction, leaving him to Ray and Billings. "Three miles out on the northern trail of the pursued, the column halted and dismounted among the pines. Then there was a brief conference, and the word "mountain" was whisped along the Beecher squadron, while Blake's men stood fast. With a parting clasp of the hand Webb and "Legs" had returned to the head of their respective commands, "Legs" and his fellows to follow steadily the Indian trail through the timber, a miter to the foothills; Webb to make an all-night forced march, in wide detour and determined effort, to head off the occupying warriors before they could reach the rocky fastness back of Bear Cliff. Webb's chief scout "Dat," chosen by Gen. Crook himself, had been a captive and had been riding through long years of his boyhood, and knew the Big Horn Range as Webb did the heads of the Washaki. "They can stand off a winter, any day," said the guide, "if once they get into the rocks. They'd have come there first off only there was no water. Now the girl's mounted." So Blake's instructions were to follow them without pushing, to let them feel they were being pursued, not by an unseen foe, but by them, and if the general's favorite scout proved to be all he promised as guide and Pathfinder, Webb might reasonably hope by dint of hard riding to be dead at the break of day. Then they would have the retreating force hampered by their few wounded and certain prisoners who were gathered, hemmed between rocky heights on every side, and strictly horsed front and rear. It was eight by the watch at the parting of the ways. It was 8:30 when Blake retraced the trail, with

Sergeants Schreiber and Winsor, the latter borrowed from Ray, far in the van. Even had the ground been hard and stony these keen-eyed soldier scouts could have followed the signs almost as intelligently as the Indians. Each had had long years of experience all over the west; but despite the steadily falling snow, the traces of hoof and pad, and the horse notes could be readily seen and followed in the dim gray light of the blanketed skies. Somewhere ahead, above the dim cloud the sun was shining and that was illumination more than enough for men of their years on the trail. For one an hour, Blake followed the windings of a ravine that grew closer and steeper as it burrowed into the hills. Old game trails are gone as turpicks in the eyes of the plainsman. It was when the ravine began to spit into branches that the scout noticed the white fence line two inches deep on the level when "Lo!" made his dash to escape. Now the rough edges of the original impression were merely rounded over by the new fallen snow. The hollows and ruts and depressions led on from here and gone—somewhere up there. And, rolling half over, Winsor pointed again toward a wooded bluff, perhaps 300 feet higher and half a mile away. "That's probably the best lookout this side of the cliff itself," he continued, in explanation, as he saw the puzzled look on the captain's face. "From there, likely, they can see the trail over the divide—the one Little Bear is leading the major, and if they're made any time, the squadron should be at Bear Cliff now."

They were crawling to him by this time, Blake and Schreiber, among the started cedars that grew thickly along the rocky ledge. Winsor, flat again on his stomach, sprang like a squirrel close to the brink. Every moment as the sides grew brighter the panorama before them became more extensive, a glorious sweep of rugged scenery, of boldly towering ridges east and south and west—the slopes all mantled, the trees all tipped, with nature's ermine, and they were met with myriad forms of wild, unbroken, yet magnificent mountain landscape.

"Worth every hour of watch and mile of climb," muttered Blake. "If it's Indians, not scenery, we're after. What are we here for, Winsor?" and narrowly he eyed Ray's famous right bower.

"If the major got there first, sir—and I believe he did—they have to send the prisoners and wounded back this way."
"The way we got 'em!" broke in Schreiber, low-toned, but exultant. "Look, sir," he added, as he pointed along the range. "They are signaling now."

From the wooded height, 1,000 yards away, curious little puffs of smoke, one following another, were snaking straight for the center, and Blake, screwing his field glasses to the focus, swept with them the mountain side toward the five-mile distant cliff and presently the muskets along his month began to twitch—sure sign with Blake of gathering excitement. "You're right, sergeant," he presently spoke, representing the desire to shoot, and striving, lest Winsor should be moved to invidious comparisons, to seem as nonchalant as Billy Ray himself. "The Indians are already there. Then down the mountain side he dove to plan and prepare appropriate welcome, leaving Winsor to capture the man now waving and eyeing watch on the situation. "Sixty-five of a glorious, keen November morning, and 600 troopers of the old regiment were distributed along the rocky crest, almost at right angles, the line of the Indian trail, sixty fur-capped, rough-coated fellows, with their short brown carbines in hand, crouching behind rocks and fallen trees, keeping close to cover and warned to utter silence. Behind them, 300 yards away, their horses were huddled under charge of their disgusted guards, envious of their fellows at the front, and cursing hard their lack in counting off as number four. Schreiber had just come sliding, stumbling down from Winsor's point to say that they could hear faint sound of sharp volleying far out to the eastward, where the warriors, evidently, were trying to "stand off" Webb's advance line until the travails of the winter and the escort of the possible prisoners should succeed in getting back out of harm's way and taking surer and higher trail into the thick of the wilderness back of Bear Cliff. "Some of 'em," said some of the men in a minute, sir," panted the veteran sergeant. "We could see them plainly up there—a miter litter and four travails, and there must be a dozen in a saddle."
A dozen there were, for along the line of crouching men went another thrill of excitement. Shoulders began to leave; nervous thumps bore down on the heavy carbine hammers, and there was sound of irresistible air on movement. Out among the pines, 500 yards away two mounted Indians peeped suddenly into view, two others speedily followed, their well-lighted, excited ponies reeling shaking their shaggy, protesting heads as their riders piled the silencing dirt or jabbed with steel having only in a painful jag trot could they zig zag through the trees. Then came two warriors, leading the pony and four travails, and there must be a dozen in a saddle. They'd halt the moment they see us tracked trail 'em alive, if possible!" were Blake's rapid orders, for his eyes were eagerly fixed on other objects beyond the line of the forest. In a moment, a single mite, laster form of between long, spined splitters and bearing this the rule Little-Hay's pack on the ground, the occupant of an Indian pony, mounted the foremost mite; another watched the second, while, on each side, the occupant of a blanketed rider on a jagged pony. Here was a percentage of consequence—then they came, in a line, the leading, dragging along on travails whose trailing poles came jolting over stone or hummock along the rugged path. It was on these that Blake's glittering eyes were fastened. "Pounce on the leaders, you that are nearest!" he ordered, in low, telling tones, his gun at his left; then turned to Schreiber, crouching close beside him, the fringe of his buckskin coat flapping. "There's the prize I want," he muttered low. "Whatever you do, let no shot reach that litter. It's our only chance. If the major cannot see you, you men to the right," he added, slightly raising his voice, "be ready to jump with me. Don't shoot anybody till I shoot first. Nab everything in sight."

"Whoop-oo!" All in a second the mountain-pole, the welkin rang; to yell of their foremost warriors, the unwieldy litter could not turn about; the frantic mules, crazed by the instant pandemonium of shouts and cries, the contrary run of charging men—the awful screams of a brace of squaws, broke from their leading reins; crashed through their lit tree canopy, the trees hauling the reckless occupant to earth. Back drove the unit warriors before the dash of the cheering line. Down went the litter, the major, panting out a lit, found himself bending staring over the prostrate form flung from the splintered wreck of the litter, a man writing in pain that forced no sound whatever from between grimly clinching teeth, yet that baffled effort, almost asper, to rise and battle with the foremost warrior, but that of the furious warrior who three had dared him on the open field, and red bare well-known by sight and deed by name, the man now waving but only within the day gone by, revealed to him as the renegade Ralph Moore—Eagle Wing of the Ogallala Sioux.

AN ANCIENT JURY.

One That Was Sent to Prison and Bound Over to Be of Good Behavior.

In olden times, when a jury in England remained impervious to the judge's gentle mode of persuasion, fine and imprisonment were resorted to. The story that acquitted Sir Nicholas Trockmorton was condemned to eight months' imprisonment in addition to the payment of a large sum of money. "The jury now is Elizabeth a jury, having reduced a prisoner's alleged crime of murder to that of manslaughter, was at once changed to a jury now waving but only within the day gone by, revealed to him as the renegade Ralph Moore—Eagle Wing of the Ogallala Sioux.

Two Good Highlanders.

During the Crimean war a Scotch officer was appointed to command a regiment recruited in Glasgow, Scotland, being a Highlander, took view of the regiment to determine whether the men favored the adoption of the Highland costume. In due time the regimental orderly appeared before the colonel with the result of the vote. "Well, orderly," said he, "how many of the men favored the adoption of the Highland plaid?" "Only two, sir." "Only two! Well, I am glad I have at least two good Highlanders in my regiment. Who are they?" "Major Edward Elaberty and Private Mulligan, sir," Philadelphia Ledger.

HARD TO BEAR.

J. W. Walls, Superintendent of Works of Leabron, Kentucky, Writing on East Main Street in that city says:

"With my right ear broken, owing to irregularities of the kidneys, suffering intensely from severe pains in the small of my back and through the kidneys, and annoyed by painful passages of abnormal secretions, life was anything but pleasant for me. No amount of doctoring relieved this condition, and for the reason that nothing seemed to give me even temporary relief, I became almost discouraged. One day I noticed in the newspapers the case of a man who was afflicted as I was and was cured by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. His words of praise for this remedy were so sincere that on the strength of his statements I went to the High Murrey Drug Co's store and got a box. I found that the medicine was exactly as powerful a kidney remedy as represented. I experienced quick and lasting relief. Doan's Kidney Pills will prove a blessing to all sufferers from kidney disorders who will give them a fair trial."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Walls will be mailed to any part of the United States on application. Address: Foster-McMillan Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists; price, 50 cents per box.

MRS. CECILIA STOWE, Oriskany, Entre Neuse Club.

176 Warren Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 22, 1902.

For nearly four years I suffered from ovarian troubles. The doctor insisted on an operation as the only way to get well. I, however, strongly objected to an operation. My husband felt dishonored as well as I, for home with a sick woman is a discomfortable place at best. A friendly druggist advised him to get a bottle of Wine of Cardui for me to try, and he did so. I began to improve in a few days and my recovery was very rapid. Within eighteen weeks I was another being.

Cardui Stowe

Mrs. Stowe's letter shows every woman how a home is saddened by female weakness and how completely Wine of Cardui cures that sickness and brings health and happiness again. Do not go on suffering. Go to your druggist today and secure a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui.
