Strikes in Belgium are not of common occurrence. The relations between the operators and their employers are most amicable. The formation of arbitration boards to pass on matters of dispute has had good effect. This is particularly so in the collieries of Mariemont and Bascoop, whose board of conciliation is famous.

Worth, the famous Paris arbiter of fashion for women, says that no dressmaker has ever dreamed of reviving such an unsuitable costume as the crinoline. He also declares that for several years to come, in his opinion, tailor-made dresses for morning wear and soft, clinging robes for the evening will be the correct vogue.

Among the prisoners in the jail at Frankfort, Germany, a prisoner who has been confined in it for a half century. He was accused of having cut the throat of a man whom he was abusing. He has never protested his innocence and has repeatedly refused his pardon because it was offered only on condition of his confessing his guilt.

The production of oranges in the United States amounts to 12,000,000 boxes per annum, of which 10,000,000 boxes are produced in California and 2,000,000 boxes in Florida. The consumption of lemons in the United States amounts to 3,000,000 cases per annum, of which 2,000,000 cases are produced in California, the remainder being imported.

President Roosevelt has sent to the Smithsonian Institution a small stuffed mouse, which the president captured on his last western trip. It is a stuffed and mounted animal. The mouse is of an uncommon species and is regarded as a valuable addition to the Institution's exhibits, yet the director, if they had been consulted, might have chosen a mountain lion rampant.

The royal family of Sweden is a thirty-one. It has a civil list of very nearly a half million dollars from Norway and Sweden, and in addition the king has a little more than $30,000 a year from the fund given to King Carl XIV. and his successors. At the same time his majesty has palaces both in the city and country, in Sweden and Norway, and he owns stock in many undertakings.

Play distinguishes the higher from the lower animals, and it signifies position of education. Fishes do not play at all; the lower mammals can hardly be taught to play, and birds are entirely devoid of that instinct. But the kitten and the lamb are essentially playing animals. The human young, however, are like true players, and, in reality, it is they that develop them into manhood.

Of all the larger cities of the country, Chicago has the largest proportion of males in its total population. During the last 20 years Chicago has averaged 5.2 per cent. more males than females, while New York has averaged 2.5 per cent. more females than males. Philadelphia 5.7 per cent. and Boston 7 per cent. more females than males. And Chicago's male death rate is the lowest of the four cities.

Biltmore, the magnificent 130,000-acre estate owned by George W. Vanderbilt, in North Carolina, may be converted into a vast hunting and fishing preserve for the use of the most exclusive and fashionable sportsmen's clubs in the country. Edgar B. Moore, proprietor of Kenilworth inn, North Carolina, now acting as agent for the estate, has received a proposition from Mr. Vanderbilt to lease his property for a term of years to be used as a hunting ground for a club which Mr. Moore is forming.

Consider first the volume of business the post office handles, says the World's Work. Through 75,234 post offices, and in such mass as to require for railroad transportation 31 trains each a mile long traveling 203 times around the equator, more than 745,000,000 pounds of matter was delivered last year. If an average were made, every man, woman and child in the United States received 61 letters, 31 newspapers or periodicals, and 14 packages and every sixth person registered a letter.

Robert Davies, a wealthy Welsh sheepowner, who owns considerable property on either side of the Menai bridge, has completed the necessary arrangements for transferring a capital sum of £150,000 to the authorities of the Calvinistic Methodist mission in the Khast Hills, India. The money, which is estimated to yield an income of more than £5,000, is invested in English railway stocks. Twelve trustees have been appointed, and the fund is to be strictly applied to the Khast mission. Mr. Davies is the brother of the late lord Beaconsfield of Carnarvon.

One of the most picturesque landmarks in the vicinity of Philadelphia is the historic Red Lion inn, just across Pennsylvania street from the city, in Bucks county. One of the earliest inns in New York state was opened, and later afterwards a really visited roadside location. The Red Lion has of late come into prominence and prosperity again. It was in this inn that Gen. Washington's army spent the winter of 1777-78. It was here that the army bivouacked on the hillsides during the historic march of the revolutionary army.

RIOTOUS SCENES.

Passengers Followed from Cars on Chicago City Railway and Beaten—Progress of the Strike.

Chicago, Nov. 16.—More rioting and disorder than in any previous day of the city railway strike marked the fourth day since the outbreak. There were several clashes yesterday with the police, the most serious rioting being in the vicinity of Forty-third and State streets, where passengers were followed from the cars and beaten. Two women were among the injured. Despoiling looting by the crowds, the company reported twenty-five cars on its Westworth avenue line, and claims many of its old employees have returned to work.

Superintendent Weatherax says many former employes have returned to the company and he predicts a break up of the strike. The company claims to have all the men it needs housed in the barns and power houses. One hundred men under command of Assistant Inspector Schuetzler will guard Cottage Grove and Westworth avenue car lines to-day. Six hundred were on duty yesterday and 400 on reserve. The governor and adjutant general investigated conditions to see if troops would be needed in Chicago.

Chicago, Nov. 17.—Twenty-five Westworth avenue cars were running on schedule time yesterday for the first time since the street car strike commenced. This was not accomplished without strenuous efforts on the part of the 1,000 policemen guarding the line and many clashes with teamsters and strike sympathizers who refused to move on when so ordered.

The strike session Monday indicated the depth of public interest in the strike. After the passage of an order for a legal opinion on the right of the police to ride on cars, a resolution commending the mayor was adopted, and the adjutant general further instructed the mayor to use his best efforts to carry a settlement by negotiation, either by appointing a committee of citizens and aldermen for that purpose or by his personal endeavor.

BURNED BY HOT METAL.

Twelve Workmen Seriously Injured in Accident in Foundry at Homestead, Pa.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 17.—The breaking of a large chain supporting a huge ladle of molten metal in the foundry of the Meta Machine company at Homestead resulted in 12 workmen being seriously burned by the hot metal. The two most seriously injured were: Charles Mitchell, aged 26; James Westland, aged 23.

The men were hoisting a huge ladle of molten metal supported by a chain when the chain suddenly broke. The metal ran over the floor and splashed on the bodies of the men, who were also compelled to wade out of the metal as it ran in pools on the floor.

POINTS OUT THE MILITIA EFFECTS

Adjutant General Says Small Per Cent. of National Guardsmen Respond to Call.

Experience Shows That This Obligation is a Heavy Burden on Part of Employers—Status of Labor Unions on the Militia Law.

Washington, Nov. 12.—The annual report of Acting Adj. Gen. Hall, of the army, deals with every phase of the military establishment. The actual strength of the army on October 15, 1903, was 3,681 officers and 55,500 enlisted men. There were lost to the army during the year ended June 30, 1903, 29,579 men, as follows: One hundred and thirty-eight officers, of whom 25 were killed in action or died of wounds or disease, 23,414 enlisted men, of whom 837 were killed in action or died of wounds or disease, the remainder representing men discharged for expiration of term of service, for disability, by sentence of court-martial, desertions and retirements.

Over one-half of the report is devoted to the militia. The total number of the organized militia, including officers of every rank, is 116,542.

Regarding the dependable strength of the militia in time of national peril, the adjutant general states that although the obligation of officers and men of the militia to respond promptly to a sudden call of the president has been on the statute books more than 100 years, experience has shown that this obligation is a heavy burden on a fact."

The report says that only about 30 per cent of the militia were finally received in the service of the United States in the war with Spain.

Hindered by Employers.
Containing the views of the adjutant general states that there is an explicable opposition on the part of employers to permit their employees who are members of the national guard to leave their work to participate in encampments, as well as in responding to calls for service from the state.

The adjutant general comments at length on the opposition developed in some quarters to the militia law, which he says is the whole cause was undelated. He says it is true that certain radical leaders of the labor unions regard the militia as a menace to their cause, but he says that the militia is a side, if its emity extends to any considerable portion of their membership.

Yates has commuted to 14 years the sentence of Thomas Scanlin, sentenced for 50 years in Chester penitentiary for the murder of John Rakestraw at a dance in New Athens, Menard county, in 1888. Rakestraw was a prominent young man of Menard county, and was an innocent bystander while a light was going on at a dance. Asa Ghierist, who also received a sentence of 30 years, shortly after being sent to the penitentiary showed signs of consumption and a few months after his sentence was commuted.

W. J. Hill, of Concord, N. C., Justice of the Peace, says that his son's Kidney Pills proved a very efficient remedy in my case. I use of them for disorders of the bladder, from which I had suffered a great deal of pain. The Kidney secretions were very irregular, dark colored and full of sediment. JUDICIAL DIGNITY.

Was Maintained in This Instance At Cost to the Cost of the Prisoner.

A certain equine of the city, who betrayed his patriotism by presiding in a small court painted red, white and blue, had a case before him which would be decided on an unusual crowd to the temple of justice. A young man was up before him, relating the Pittsburg Dispatch, on a charge of stealing brass, and his friends were out in full force to see that he got "fair show."

"The case opened the noise and confusion became so great that his honor declared that the next man to indulge in an outburst would be ejected from the room. He had barely ceased speaking when a young man stood up at the same time waving his hat above his head.

"Hooray for Squire Hoogan!" "Put him out," cried the court, and in another instant the young man found himself being rushed to the door. Order having been restored, the prisoner was brought before the bar for trial. The court afterwards rudely glanced about through the crowd, and then a great light suddenly fell upon him.

"Can't do it your honor," he replied. "The young fellow you just put out was the prisoner."

PINE COUNTY PIONEER.

ED. C. GORTYR, Editor and Prop.

Entered in the Post Office at Pine City as Second Class Matter.

PINE CITY, MINN., Nov. 20, 1903

Don't worry about the age of Ann.

At last accounts the Hon. Tom Johnson refuses to pull the hole in after him.

A time for everything, everything in its place, and no place empty, is a good maxim.

Having killed the goose that has been about to lay the golden egg, our Columbian friends may now sit on the fence and see the new republic of Panama carry off the coin.

The Bird Count cartoon artist of the Chicago Tribune should take warning. An artist in Turkey who drew a caricature of the sultan has been sentenced to 101 years in prison.

In a talk to his Sunday school class John D. Rockefeller scared the trusts that are worked for personal gain to the detriment of the public. We hope that will deter the old man from raising the price of oil again this week.

The parcels post bill will undoubtedly come up for consideration at the next meeting of Congress, and merchants and express companies throughout the United States are already marshaling forces in opposition to the measure. At the same time the farmers and the big mail order houses are making equally strong effort to have the bill passed. The bill provides for a cheap rate of postage on small packages of merchandise.

It seems that we have not heard the last of the Marine Band's visit to Chicago, at which time the union bands refused to turn out at the centennial parade. The secretary of the American Federation of Union musicians has been in Washington looking into the matter and announces that he will carry the matter into the halls of Congress, where an attempt will be made to prevent the government band from playing for money other than their regular pay from the government.

Lady Somerset gives the British government a stinging rebuke when she says that "But for England the sultan would not now reign in his palace on the Bosphorus. We have fought for the Turk. We have financed the Turk. We have guaranteed him against his enemies, and in exchange we have accepted his miserable promises of reform and ignored their failure whenever it was convenient to us." And the words of the lady have so much truth in them that the English statesmen should bow their heads in shame.

Work is progressing rapidly on the statue of General Robert E. Lee which is to be erected in statutory hall in the national capitol. It is gratifying to the public in general to feel that the old prejudices growing out of the civil war have been so far removed as to make it possible for a statue of the great confederate general to be placed alongside of those of the federal soldiers. It is as it should be. Robert E. Lee was one of the greatest generals America has ever known, and though he fought for a lost cause his sterling qualities are so well known he is entitled to all the honor we can give his memory.

A few years ago we hailed the advent of the German carp with open arms, but to day we are lamenting the fact that they were brought to this country. In Wisconsin the fish waters have begun to try and clear them out of the waters of the state, but it is almost a hopeless task. The German carp is not what we thought he would be. He lives almost entirely on vegetable matter, with the result that the muskrat and other fish which have been almost entirely eaten up, thus destroying the protection of the young game fish. The latter is fast disappearing, and the carp is multiplying at a frightful rate. Most people have a prejudice against carp and will not eat them, and the public in general are beginning to regret the day they were introduced into our streams.

MARSHALL Field, the big Chicago dry goods merchant, is of the opinion that the business depression has reached its lowest point for a number of years to come, and that from now on we will see a gradual increase in the manufacturing world. He is also of the opinion that the hard lines in which the trusts have been plunged will be for the general welfare of the country, and that the financial situation will hereafter be on a sound and conservative basis.

NEWSPAPER readers who have kept track of current events during the past year must have been impressed by the activity of the war department in teaching the practice as well as the theory of war. The army and the National guard have been engaged in joint maneuvers, and officers of experience are uniting in commending the new departure as a move in the right direction for the welfare of the country. So long as the European nations maintain their present large standing armies it is incumbent upon the United States to be prepared for an emergency, and to do this our army must have the benefit of all the practice possible.

An item is going the rounds which ought to establish once and for all the veracious race problem. A few months ago a colored maid gave a portion of her skin to graft on her mistress who had been badly burned, but that the physicians are now greatly alarmed because the skin all around the sores is turning black. They are afraid that the woman will soon be entirely black skinned. "Now of course," says Mrs. L., "that would be hard on that particular woman, but think of the great benefit to the world. The negro question would be once and for all speedily and effectually solved. All we would have to do would be to give a little of our white skin to our colored brethren, and nature and time would do the rest. What an easy solution!"

We heartily commend the good sense and patriotism of the following from the Chester (Pa.) Times, and would suggest that it is appropriate in any community:

The petition of the Grand Army of the Republic for aid from the county treasury for the purpose of supplementing the receipts from the usual sources that it may be possible to continue the local organizations has a very pathetic side. The Grand Army is not a beneficial organization in the same sense that other fraternal societies are, for no sick benefits are paid and the rapidly diminishing roster of the Posts makes it impossible to pay commensurate death benefits; but the order is for the purpose of keeping up the recollections of the days of the Rebellion, of keeping alive the spirit of sacrifice and patriotism and in various ways of perpetuating the lessons of the Civil War. The members bear a relation to the public that is entirely unique, for they performed a service to the public and to the nation that is not the heritage of any other secret society, and that is why the people should not permit the Posts of the Grand Army of the Republic to disband until the last veteran of the great struggle has answered the roll call.

It is perfectly clear, as it has been growing clear for several years in better times, the old dependence of the west on New York for money to move the crops has come to an end says the Minneapolis Tribune. It has been understood for some years that western banks no longer borrowed money in New York for fall uses; that they simply withdrew their own money from deposit with the New York bank. Even this was a terror to the speculators who wanted to borrow the western balances for their own operations. This year it has been proved that the west can even afford to leave its balances in New York, if the speculators will only pay high enough interest for the use of it. It is evident that there is western money enough to move crops, even without withdrawing all the balances kept in New York.

OUR SERIAL

THE FIRST JOURNEY.

A silent pilgrim, I was borne
Hither into this desert of life,
Unfringed, lone, and yet unworn
By any sense of air or strife—
I anchored at the Port of Life.

Unknowing, hitherward I came!
Unknowing all I crossed the bar.
Where life's bars round me like a tower
And one face shone, sweet, like a star.
And one a grave, stern, stormy sea.

A pilgrim here I nothing brought
Save my white, child, unspiced soul
That nothing "twas as if God thought
A pilgrim, without sin or guilt
That were enough—a pure, child soul!

Came nothing bringing—land nor gold—
Save the immortal gift of Love.
Happily my baby hand could hold
That holiest heart sent from above
With joy, the sister twin to Love.

Were it too much for me to ask
Some note of life—its hopes and fears—
To fit me for my coming days?
When wandering through the crowding years
Who was it gave the gift of tears?

Not angels, not in my own heaven
Are found the deeper whence tears may
Only to mortal is it given
To sound the breaking note of weep;
Nor do we take the gift of tears.

Lovely and far I came, yet met
The wonder was to be alone—
Till light alone round me comfort, cheer:
Then life's benighted, a lamb—a man—
And then, O strange, a cry—mine own!

They asked me naught, but took my hand
In kind hands were there—then food and rest
It was as if it had always been
Ned did they ask me of my quest—
The welcome was the same—

A Daughter of the Sioux

By GEN. CHARLES KING.

A woful time, it seems, they had had with poor Nannette when at last it became necessary to take her away from her dead brave. She raged and raved at even pleading suit. Defiant of them all, from the general down, and reckless of law or fact, she vowed it was all a conspiracy to murder Moreau in cold blood. They gave him the knife, she declared, although it later developed that she had tossed it through the open window. They had given him the chance to escape, she said. Kennedy, "who had striven to kill him twice before," and then of the blacksmith, with the degrading blacksmith—all just to tempt him to make a dash for freedom—just as they had hured and murdered Crazy Horse—Crazy Horse, his brave kinsman, ten years before—then had placed a dead shot on the path to life and liberty—a man who killed him in cold blood, as deliberately planned. These were her accusations, and that story took strong hold in certain circles in the far east.

Nannette said many other things before her final breakdown; and Hay and his sorrowing wife found their load of care far heavier, for the strain of Indian blood, now known to all, had steeled the soul of the girl against the people at Fort Frayne, men and women both, against none so vehemently as those who would have shown her sympathy, none so malignantly as those who had suffered for her sake.

This was especially true of Field. In the mad hope of "getting justice," as she termed it, for the dead, she had demanded speech of the general, and in presence of "Black Bill" and the surgeon, he had given her a hearing. It proved fatal to her cause, for in her fury at what she termed the triumph of the "black" she lost all sense of right or reason, and declared that it was Field who had warned Stabber's band and sent them fleeing to unite with Lane Wolf—Field who took the trader's horses and rode by night with Kennedy to warn them it was Webb's intention to surround the village at dawn and make prisoners of the men. It was Field, she said, who furnished the money Moreau claimed to have stolen, his claim to a gold mine in the Black Hills, the ownership of which would make them rich and repay Field a dozen times over. It was Field who sought to protect her kindred among the Sioux in hopes, she said it boldly, of winning her. But the general had heard enough. The door was opened and Ray and Blake were ushered in. The former briefly told of the finding of her note in Field's room the night the adjutant was so mysteriously missing. The note itself was held forth by the inspector general and she was asked if she cared to have it opened and read aloud. Her answer was that Field was a coward, a dastard to betray a woman who had trusted him.

"Oh, he didn't," said Blake dryly. "He couldn't be induced to open his head, so his friends took it through your Indian followers. You wrote to Field and sent the note by Pete, bidding him join you at that godless stables between his tribe and yours, telling him that you would ride the horses and that you must ride to Stabber's camp to see Moreau for the last time, as he was going at case to the Black Hills. You made Field believe I was your half brother, instead of what he was. You brought Moreau back to the post and took something. I can't say what you did with him from Mr. Hay's waiting for you on the data below the trader's curral. You should have worn your moccasins, as well as a divided skirt, that night instead of French-beeled bottles. The rest—others can tell."

The others were Kennedy, and the recaptured, half recaptured Pete, the latter turned state's evidence. Kennedy told her he had warned down into the flats after "the few drinks" that made him think scornful of Sioux; of his encounter with Eagle Wing, reared by Field, and a girl who spoke Sioux like a native. He thought it was little Fawn Eyes when he heard her speak, and until he heard this lady, then he understood. He had been pledged to secrecy by the lieutenant, and averred means that he had seen her. He heard the lie the lady told about the lieutenant, it ended any promise.

Then Pete, an abject, whining wretch, was wheeled in, and history, when dragged out by the roots was worst of all. Poor Mrs. Hay! She had to hear it, for they sent for her, somebody had to restrain Nannette. Pete said he had "known Nannette long time, ever since baby. So had Crapaud. Yes, and they had known Eagle Wing, Moreau, Harney, knew his father and mother. Knew Nannette's father and mother." But Black Bill interposed. No need to go into details. He had just been relieving Mrs. Hay and himself, said he. "The lady knows perfectly well that I know all about her glances at Pete returned to modern history. Eagle Wing, it seems, came riding often in from Stabber's camp to see Nannette by night, and they had a heap trouble, always heap trouble, always want money," and one night she told Pete he must come with her, must never tell of it. She had money, she said, her own, in the trader's safe, but the door was too heavy, she couldn't open it, even though she had the key. She had opened the story by the back door, then came to him to help her with the rest. He pulled the safe door open, he said, and then she hustled and found two big bottles, and took them to the house, and next night she opened the store again, and he pulled open the safe, and she put back the letters and sent him to Mr. Field's back door with note, and then over to saddle Harney and Dan, and "bring 'em out back way from stable." "But later on," said Black Bill, "he had Eagle Wing's buckskin pouch and letters, and they must get them or somebody would hang Eagle Wing away from her right away, 'all time going,' meeting messengers from the Sioux camp, or carrying them to the trader's store, and they had to come and capture Hay and the wagon—fixed everything even to nearly murdering the sentry on Number six. Pete and Spotted Horse, a young brave of Stabber's band, had compassed that attempted rescue. She would have them kill the sentry if need be, and they did it. Eagle Wing was away that she couldn't wait until the sentries had called off. They might even have succeeded, only that she broke away and she clung to Eagle Wing's until he had to hit her to make her let go.

The wild girl, in a fury declared it false, and she would end. The poor woman, weeping by her side, bowed her head and declared it doubtless true.

Her story—Mrs. Hay's—was a saddest of all. Her own father died when she was very young. He was a French Canadian trader and trader who had left them fairly well to do. Next to her Indian mother, Mrs. Hay had loved no soul on earth as she had her pretty baby sister. The girls grew up together. The younger, petted and spoiled, fell in love with a handsome, reckless young French lad named Jean, Jean's wife, against all warnings, became his wife, and was soon bullied, beaten and deserted. She lived but a little while, leaving her more prosperous and head-bered sister, now wedded to Mr. Hay, their baby daughter, also named Nannette, and by her the worthy couple had done the very best. Perhaps it would have been wiser had they sent the child away from all association with the Sioux, but she had lived eight years on the Laramie in daily contact with them, sharing the Indian sports and games, loving their free life, and rebelled furiously when finally taken East. "She" was the real reason why her aunt spent so many months of each succeeding year away from her husband and the frontier. One of the band and the frontier. One of the girl's playmates was a magnificent young savage, a son of Crow Killer, the black eagle who shot her father, was killed the day of Crazy Horse's fierce assault on the starting force of Gen. Crook at Slim Buttes in '76, and good, kind and true as people possibly are, his promise in the lad, put him at school and strove to educate him. The rest you knew. Sometimes at Eastern schools, sometimes with Buffalo Bill, but generally out of money and into mischief, Eagle Wing went from one vent to another, and Nannette, foolishly permitted to meet him again in the East, had become infatuated. All that art and education, wealth, and the life she had combined could do, was done to wean her from her passionate adoration of this superb young savage. There was no forever, more lenience, devotion than that the girl lost, her passionately loved brave. She believes his love in turn, and this did Nannette more than burn, and believing, slaved and suffered, until she died through the illness that she might wield more money from her aunt to lavish on her love. When discovered meeting him in secret and by night, she was locked in her third story room and thought secure, until the day revealed her gone by the way of the lightning rod. They had to resort to more stringent measures, but time and again she met him, undetected until too late, and when at last her situation was declared complete, she had amazed her aunt by expressing willingness to go to Frayne, when the good woman thought the objectionable kinsman abroad with Buffalo Bill. Until too late, Mrs. Hay knew nothing of his having been discharged and of his preceding them to the west. Then Nannette begged her for more money, because he was in dreadful trouble—had stabbed a police officer at Omaha, whose people, so Moreau said, agreed not to prosecute him if $100,000 dollars could be paid at once. Hay's patience had been exhausted. He had finally refused to contribute another cent to settle Moreau's scrapes, even though he was a distant kinsman of his wife, and they both were fond of his little sister Fawn Eyes. It had never occurred to Mrs. Hay that Nan could steal from or plot against her benefactors, but that was before she had seen the Indian's wife. After that anything might happen. "If she could do that for love of Moreau," said she, "there was nothing she could not do."

And it would seem there was little short of deliberate murder she had done for her Sioux lover, who had rewarded her utter self sacrifice by a savage blow with a revolver butt. "Poor Nannette!" sobbed Mrs. Hay, and "Poor Nannette!" said Mr. Frayne, their distrust of her buried and forgotten as she lay, reeking her way to every corner, stirring herself in dull, desperate misery in her lonely room. Even grim old "Black Bill" whom she had recognized as the man who had been the first to confirm Blake's suspicions as to her identity—had pity and compassion for her. "It's the way of the blood," said Black Bill, "and she's a free one of that bloody strain. That haunted us in our familiar paths."

"She could do no different," said the general, "having fixed her eyes on him. It's the strain of the Sioux. We call her conduct criminal—they call it sublime."

And one night, while decision in Nannette's case was still pending, and still self-secluded, she hid within the trader's house, refusing speech with any one but little Fawn Eyes. A "high party set out from Frayne for a spin by moonlight along the frozen Platte. Wagon bodies had been set on runners, and piled with hay. The young people from "deers' roves" with the proper allowance of patrons and elders, were stowed therein, and tucked in robes and furs. Either Dada among them, general, responsive as ever, yet still very silent. Field, in his deep mourning went nowhere. He seemed humiliated beyond words by his connection with this most painful affair. Even the general failed to cheer and reassure him. He blamed himself for everything, and always went with his friends. They saw the dim glow of the student lamp in his quarters, as they jingled cheerily away, they were coming homeward, toward ten o'clock. The moon was shining brightly along the bold heights of the southern bank, and insensibly, chat and laughter gradually ceased as they came again in sight of the twinkling lights of Frayne, and glanced aloft at a new-made scaffolding, standing black against the sky as the crew of Peterman Bluff. "Eagle Wing roasts high," said a thoughtful youngster. "The general let them have their way to the last. What that?" he added, with sudden stop.

The sleigh had as suddenly been reined in. The driver, an Irish trooper, croaked himself, for, on the height of the breathless winter night, there rose and fell—shrill, quavering, now high, now low, in mournful minor, a weird, desolate, despairing chant, the voice of the heart-broken woman, and one and all knew at once it was Nannette, after the manner of her mother's people, alone on the her height, alone in the wintry wilderness, sobbing out her grief song to the swirling winds, mourning to the last her lost, her passionately loved brave.

Then all on a sudden, it ceased. A puff of wind started from under the scaffolding to the edge of the bluff. Then again, wild, wild, under a barbaric, almost savage strain burst from the lips of the girl. "Mother of Heaven!" cried the driver. "Go to one stop that awful noise. It's her death song she's singing!"

Two young officers sprang from the sleigh, but at the instant another cry arose. Another form, this one of horse and rider, appeared at the crest, silhouetted with the girl's against the stars. They saw the rider leap from saddle, almost within arm's length of the singer, saw her quickly turn, as though, for the first time, aware of an intruder. Then the wailing song went out in sudden scream of mingled wrath, hatred and despair, and like the Sioux that she was at heart, the girl made one mad rush to reach the point of bluff where was a sheer descent of over 50 feet. A shriek of dread went up from the crowded sleigh; a cry of rejoicing, as the intruder sprang and clasped her, preventing her reaching the precipice. But almost instantly followed a moan of anguish for slipping at the crest, together, finally linked, they came rolling, sliding, shooting down the steep incline of the frozen bluff, and brought up with stunning force near a distant kinsman of his wife, and they both were fond of his little sister Fawn Eyes. It had never occurred to Mrs. Hay that Nan could alone in this wintry wilderness. He studied his pupils.

Why Dr. Thring Was One of England's Most Successful Teachers.

Dr. Edward Thring, next to Arnold of Rugby, was considered to be the most successful teacher of boys in England. The father of the lad, the more eager was Dr. Thring to take him to school, and he was not long in doing so.

On one occasion a despairing father brought his son to his door.

"John must do something for his own good," the teacher spoke to him, "I have taught him to read, to write, to teach, his schoolfellows, me, in everything. He will not take it for granted that twice two are four until he has learned to read."

"John is in for more hopeful condition than the amiable boy who always goes with the crowd," said the doctor, "but he is not infallible."

After two years the father went again to Dr. Thring.

"What miracle have you worked upon John?" he asked. "He is happy, affectionate and sensible."

"I taught him to read, to write, to suffer him to be a leader," was the reply. "Boys are like sheep. One finds a path, the others follow. The masterful strength boys can be trained into a wise captain. It is the weak lad who always copies his fellows that is not worth drilling."

The teacher's famous teacher is more worthy of attention because education too often treats boys and girls in the mass, neglecting individual differences. Dr. Thring, by his careful attention to boys of peculiar character, has given to the England of to-day some of its most useful men.

Hospitable Pat.

A certain Englishman took a shooting in Ireland. He was assured that it was a good sporting territory. When he arrived, this was corroborated by the head keeper, a typical Paddy. The latter declared that the country fairly bristled with pheasants. So they went out after them and in a day put up two. The next day the tenant inquired after partridges and was told the same tale; the shoot yielded about six. Woodcock, grouse, capercaillie, every kind of game bird told "his count" were as thick as leaves in autumn, but they could not be found. At last he said angrily, "Are there many more counts on the estate?" "Shure, yer 'omner," droned Pat very slowly. "Not many, not many," but brightening up, "you may put up two or three more birds if you like."

Long before the summer, of course, the tenancy would be at an end. "You confounded rascal!" roared the tenant, "why do you insist on telling me all these lies?" "Shure," said Pat with a true Hibernal grin, "an' wouldn't I be givin' yer 'omner a pleasant answer?"—London Tattler.

Chained But Harmless.

A Londoner, just arrived at a Scottish town, and on his way to the hotel, addressed the porter who led the way. "Not a large place this?" "No, verry," was the answer. "But what is the name of the corporation?" "A what, sir?" inquired the baggage bearer. "I mean, who rules the town?" "Hush! Hush! It's Provost." "What, the Provost. Like our Lord Mayor? Has he got any insignia?" remarked the cockney. "Insignia? What d'ye mean?" quoth the porter. "Yes, insignia; that is the polite way of saying he's a chain?" the polite visitor hinted. Whereupon the almost dumbfounded porter, a nameless maker encouraging the belief in saints ruling the weather. Notwithstanding this and similar efforts to chain the weather, however, still applied to assist in what may be called long-distance forecasts. St. Catherine, whose feast is celebrated on Nov. 14, is such a saint, for 'tis on Catherine, foul or fair, so will be the next February."—Detroit Free Press

Miss Rose Peterson, Secretary Parkdale Tennis Club, Chicago, from experience advises all young girls who have pains and sickness peculiar to their sex, to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

How many beautiful young girls develop into worn, listless and hopeless women, simply because sufficient attention has not been paid to their physical development. No woman is exempt from physical weakness and periodic pain, and young girls just budding into womanhood should be carefully guided physically as well as morally.

If you know of any young lady who is sick, and needs motherly advice, ask her to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., who will give her advice free, from a source of knowledge which is unequalled in the country. Do not hesitate about stating details which one may not like to talk about, and which are essential for a full understanding of the case.

Miss Hannah E. Mershon, Collingswood, N. J., says:

"I thought I would write and tell you that by following your kind advice, I feel like a new person. I was always thin and delicate, and so weak that I could hardly do anything. Menstruation was irregular.

"I tried a bottle of your Vegetable Compound, and began to feel better right away. I continued its use, and am now well and strong, and menstruate regularly. I cannot say enough for what your medicine did for me."

How Mrs. Pinkham Helped Fannie Kumpfe.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I feel it is my duty to write and tell you of the benefit I have derived from the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The pains in my back and womb have all left me, and my menstrual trouble is corrected. I am very thankful for the good advice you gave me, and will recommend your medicine to all who suffer from female weakness."

MRS. CECILIA STOWE,
Orator, Entre Nous Club.

176 Warren Avenue,
CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 29, 1902.

For nearly four years I suffered from ovarian troubles. The doctor insisted on an operation as the only way to get well. I, however, strongly objected to an operation. My husband felt disinclined as well as I, for home with a sick woman is a desolate place at best. A friendly druggist advised him to get a bottle of Wine of Cardui for me to try, and to bid so. I began to improve in a few days and my recovery was very rapid. Within eighteen weeks I was another being.

Cecelia Stowe
Mrs. Stowe's letter shows every woman how a home is made by female weakness and how completely Wine of Cardui cures that sickness and brings health and happiness again. Do not go on suffering. Go to your druggist today and secure a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui.
