PINE CITY TALLIES AGAIN

Barnum Came Down Sunday Met Pine City on the Diamond and Were Done up to the Tune of 4 to 9.

Last Sunday afternoon the Barnum base ball team and the Pine City team crossed bats on the grounds on the north side of the river.

The game was called at 1:30 to give the Barnum boys a chance to catch the limited for home that evening.

The game was a good one for five innings, but after that time the locals were to much for their opponents who will be seen by the score by innings printed below.

Stoutenberg, the locals' twirler, pitched a good game, and if it had not been for the errors of his teammates would have sent the visitors home with a coat of whitewash.

SCORE BY INNINGS. H R E
 Pine City 1 0 0 0 3 0 1 4 6 9 6

Struck out by Skelton 9; by Stoutenberg 4. Bases on balls, off Skelton 4; off Stoutenberg 1. Hit by pitcher, Payne. Double play, Barnum 1; Pine City 1. Two base hits, Barnum 1; Pine City 1. Three base hit, Pine City 1. Wild throw, Breckenridge. Umpire, R. Harte. Time 1:55.

NOTES OF THE GAME.

B. Lambert's long hit to right field in the eighth, good for three bags, was a dandy.

J. Kahring made a sensational one hand catch in the eighth inning, was a lucky one as it shut off two scores.

Stoutenberg pitched good ball all through the game. His control was excellent, only walking one man.

Barnum scoring three runs in the third was the result of a couple of errors and an overthrow.

COMMUNICATED.

As the people will remember, last July Joes Hakes was drowned at St. Paul.

Ira Hakes and wife were making their home with him. When he was drowned that broke up their home in that city. They came to my home at once, and it was our intention to give them a home the rest of their days. About two weeks ago they started for North Branch on a visit, as they had been in the habit of doing. In a few days the old gentlemen came back and said they had decided to move to Amador. I can prove by these old people that there has never been any trouble between us and that they had a good home while living with us.

Now some degraded liars are telling around the country that we drove these old people out. These same ones are never without a lie in their mouths, and making trouble with their neighbors.

J. L. VANGORDEN.

NOTICE.

A meeting is called to meet in the Pine City State Bank on Saturday evening, May 23rd 1908, at 8 o'clock, of all citizens interested in the forming of a citizens committee, to take up the work and relieve and help the old soldiers in properly conducting the ceremonies on Decoration Day, May 29th, each year. It is hoped that all patriotic citizens will attend.

THE POTATO AS A POWER PRODUCER

The Humble Tuber, Not Satisfied as to Its Capacity to Feed Humanity, Gives a Promise of Supplying Light, Heat and Power to All

[By G. W. Wythe, Galveston, Texas—Prize article]

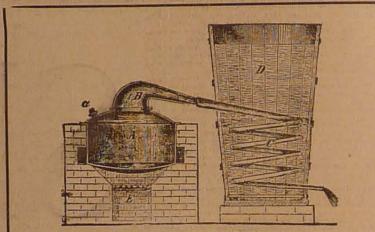

The potato's value as a food product seems about to be eclipsed by its availability as a new source of light, heat and power.

We are indebted to Germany for the innovation of using alcohol in the industries. Its rise there was due to the fact that the great empire possesses no petroleum wells. German scientists sought and finally found a substitute for these oils which nature had denied them, with the result that the alcohol industry has already become an extensive one in Continental Europe.

It is well known that alcohol for drinking and medicinal purposes is final operation is to distill the resultant liquor, or as those who are engaged in its manufacture call it, the wash.

This is done by placing the wash in an inclosed copper boiler, which has a stem projecting from its top, and strongly resembles an inverted tobacco pipe. To the end of the stem a coil of copper pipe or a worm is attached and the latter placed in a barrel or other vessel provided with an inlet at the top and an outlet at the bottom. The lower and free end of the worm projects through the barrel to the outside. This is practically all the apparatus produced from fruit and grain, but possibly it may not be so well known that alcohol used for heating, lighting and power purposes is made by distilling wood, potatoes and the crude molasses that is left over in the making of beet sugar.

A SAMPLE FORM OF FARM STILL

Explanation—E, furnace. A, boiler, in which mash is placed; small "a" valve, B, retort for collecting and forcing alcohol into worm C, where it is cooled and condensed into spirit by water surrounding worm in tank D.

These raw materials the common potato is the most profitable source of industrial alcohol, and as every one who has a patch of ground can grow the tubers a corner on the output is impossible. Further, the entire process of transforming the tubers into liquid fuel is so simple that it may be carried on with apparatus as crude as that employed by the moonshiner in his mountain fastness, where he makes the colonel's favorite beverage, and with-out excitement.

To produce potato spirit, as it is termed, it is only necessary to beat the spuds into a pulp, put the mass into a fine sieve, and let a stream of water run through it. This washes out all the starch, which is conveyed to a vessel where it settles to the bottom. Since starch can be converted into sugar, and sugar is the direct source of alcohol, the water is drawn off, and the green starch permitted to dry.

The starch is again mixed with water. It is now stirred constantly to prevent it from falling to the bottom. While it is being thus agitated, boiling water is poured in, with the starch, forms a paste, but as more hot water is added the substance becomes perfectly clear.

When this point is reached a small amount of malt (sprouted barley ground to a meal) is thrown in and thoroughly stirred. The vessel is covered tightly to allow the diastatic power, which acts as a fermenting agent, to act upon the starch and change it into sugar.

The result of this action is a syrup, and this, together with more water, is placed in a vat, where the process of fermentation is continued for a day or two or until it is completed; otherwise all of the alcohol cannot be gotten out of it. The next and of a primitive plant, and it can be constructed by any tinsmith at very small cost.

Now, when heat is applied to the boiler or still, as it is called, the alcohol, or spirit, begins to fill the upper space in the form of vapor, and this, with the steam that is also generated, is forced down, and passing through the worm it is liquefied, for the cooled pipe is kept cold by the ever changing water flowing through the barrel. After the alcohol is condensed into a fluid gravity does the rest, and it falls from the still to the projecting worm drop by drop into the vessel.

The alcohol that is obtained by the first distillation contains a large amount of water and oils that have been carried over with vapor, and to get rid of these it is necessary to redistill the product if the method outlined is adhered to. But by means of fractional stills the process has been brought to a high degree of perfection, and alcohol that is suitable for all industrial and commercial purposes is easily and cheaply made.

These household commodities are undoubtedly of vital interest, but in our estimation the most important is the use of alcohol as a motive power for engines. Alcohol engines are safer than those employing gas, gasoline or benzine, while their cleanliness as well as the fact that they are more economical are also making their adoption in the near future by automobileists.

Finally, all manner of farm machinery may eventually run with distilled alcohol engines, and every farmer will grow his own potatoes and harvest his own light, heat and power. All of which indicates that the time is at hand when the means of circumventing the law supply and demand of liquid fuel will not entail the widespread practice of hard frugality, now often manifested.

To Cut Down World's Fuel Bill.

"Less than 25 years from now railroad transportation will carry no fuel. Trains all over the country will be run by power conveyed by wire from a dozen great central plants located in the neighborhood of coal mines. There will be no smoke, no cinders, to make a journey by rail disagreeable." Thus Prof. Robert H. Fernald, expert in charge of the government fuel inquiry is quoted by Robert Franklin in the Technical World Magazine. It has been proved practicable, he says, by the help of gas-producers and gas engines, to convert the energy of coal into electricity and transmit it by wire over distances exceeding 250 miles. "This means that trains could be run from a single central plant over so many lines that there would nearly four times that of the state of Illinois—and that ten or twelve such plants, located at or near mining centers, could furnish motive power for all the railroads in the United States." Now that it is commercially possible to transmit electric power 250 miles or more," says Prof. Fernald, "the location of immense gas-producer plants at the mines, or within easy reach of them, must speedily follow. But it should not be supposed that this power will be utilized only by the railroads of the country. It will be supplied to factories, and employed for all sorts of industrial purposes. In cities and towns, where transportation will be thus enabled to enjoy cleanliness and freedom from the tyranny of smoky chimneys." This is the introduction to a remarkable article in this magazine.

Several plans have been made to establish a national American university. The idea, recently expressed in a bill introduced into the house of representatives, is as follows: as the country, Washington in his address to congress in 1890, urged the promotion of art and science, and recommended that congress consider "whether the desirable object will be best promoted by affording aids to seminaries of learning already established by the institution of a national university, or by any other expedients." The question suggested by Washington has not been finally settled, although it has been answered in part by the growth of our colleges and universities throughout the land; and in a country like ours of wide area there will be many great centers of education. It sometimes seems better to strengthen the colleges we have than to found new ones, but there is room for others. A national university might have special functions such as present institutions are not in position to discharge, and its official nature would make it a powerful influence in American higher education, which is now disorganized and uncertain in standard.

There have been from time to time many reported inventions of bullet-proof coats or undershirts; but somehow none ever seemed to meet a really adequate test. Now comes the story that Russian colonel has devised a garment of this kind which is actually what is claimed. While the garment for construction is not given out, the announcement made that the materials are three and a half times as hard as steel. The coat is warranted to ward off a Mauser bullet fired from a high-power rifle. Still, it is not going to be easy to obtain or wear the bullet-proof coat. The garment is very costly and weighs five pounds, and a man trotting around in it must feel something like the armoured knights of old. But, asks the Times, "wouldn't it be a good idea compared to value as a life preserver?" If the coat is truly bullet proof, no doubt there are a good many rich and titled persons in Russia who would think the garment cheap at ten times the cost in money and discomfort.

Bullet-proof boys who are afraid to go into the street because they should get run over may be fired at by the police to make them realize that hope that some day they will be president of the United States, but the rough-and-tumble kid has his eye fixed on a position as pitcher in the championship team of one of the big leagues. He appears to him to be a higher position than president or even Showalter in a democratic state. As he pitches the tattered ball in the cant let his mind's eye wavers forward to the time when admiring matitudes will rise up to applaud his curves, meanwhile saving enough of their strength to throw pop bottles at his adversary of the rival team.

A dispatch says that Prince Vasilii Sergejevitch Kutuzoff and his wife, Warwara Trunovskaya Kutuzoff, of Russia, have gone to Douchkobor's. Note to printer: Please set the letters back in the alphabet after using.

WOMAN A VICTIM OF MRS. GUINNESS

ONE OF THE BODIES DUG UP IS FOUND TO BE THAT OF A FEMALE.

Bits Story of Greening—Man and Wife Disappeared the Night Jennie Olsen Is Believed to Have Been Murdered.

Laporte, Ind., May 19.—The autopsy on the remains of the seven unidentified dead bodies found in Mrs. Greening's private burial ground was completed Monday evening, and revealed the astounding fact, according to the reports of Drs. F. T. Wilcox and George R. Osborne, that one of the seven was a female. This has aroused new interest in the story of Emily Greening of Oklahoma City, Okla., who was employed by Mrs. Guinness in the fall of 1904.

Greening worked for Mrs. Guinness at the time that Jennie Olsen disappeared and his story was to the effect that on a certain day in September, 1904, he had been invited to the house and that night Miss. Guinness asked Greening to sleep in the barn, for the couple, who she said were a professor and his wife from the Los Angeles college which Jennie was to attend, would spend the night at the ranch and would require Greening's bedroom. In the morning Greening saw nothing of Jennie nor of the man and woman, and was informed by Mrs. Guinness that they had left on an early train, taking Jennie along.

May Have Stolen the Couple.

The couple, which is now declared to be that of a woman and a man, were found in the same hole as was that of Jennie Olsen, and in that hole also were the bodies of Ole Bludberg of Iola, Wis., and the remains of a male person. All the bodies were dismembered, but it is expected to identify the bodies of James Olsen and Mr. Bludberg, and the autopsies have determined that one of the other two was that of a female.

The theory advanced is that Mrs. Guinness, the night that Greening slept in the barn, murdered not only just Olsen, but also the man and woman.

Lamphere Had Mrs. Watch.

The mystery surrounding the watch found on the person of Ray Lampshire, which he was arrested was cleared Monday, when J. W. Johnson, of Manfield, N. D., who came here to investigate the disappearance of his half brother, John Doe, of Elbow Lake, Minn., identified the time-piece as one owned by his brother when he left home. The members of the family corresponded with the number in Mrs. Moe's possession. Lamphere said that Mrs. Guinness gave him the watch.

The Lamphere county grand jury has voted to indict Mrs. Guinness, and of witnesses in the Guinneess case, except progress being made. The expectation is that the greater part of the week will be consumed in the investigation. The trial of Lamphere will be held on May 22.

Elbow Lake in Puget Sound will be over before the end of the month and then the officers and men will resume the usual routine of man-of-war men. Orders call for the reassembling of the fleet in San Francisco harbor not later than July 1. On July 7 it will sail for Honolulu and after a week's stay there goes direct to Anchorage.

The fleet of armored cruisers, under command of Rear Admiral Dayton, sailed south Sunday morning at eight o'clock.

Onions Has $500,000 Fire.

Leavenworth, Kan., May 19.—It was the desire of the leaders of the fire department to have the building in which Christian rites were held Friday night in Paxton's cemetery, on the outskirts of Laporte. The corpse was that of Andrew K. Heiligenfeld of Mansfield, the young man to meet his death in the trap to which Mrs. Guinness forced her victim.

The body was released for burial to Captain Nick Smith, who received the report of the coroner and experts who have examined it and compared their findings with figures taken from the records of the Minnesota penitentiary at Stillwater. Two officials of the Michigan City police and Capt. A. Brans of the Chicago police identification bureau directed the work. Both reports were to the effect that it was the body of Heiligenfeld.

PRESIDENT TO CHURCHMEN

MR. ROOSEVELT ADDRESSES A CROWD OF METHODISTS.

Talks to Them of Duties of Good Citizens and Especially of the Women.

Washington, May 16.—Many scores of Methodists who have been attending the general conference of their church in Baltimore this week came to Washington Saturday to see the nation's capital and to pay their respects to the president.

Mr. Roosevelt received them with cordiality and delivered a graceful and interesting address that pleased them highly. After paying his respects to the work of the Methodist church in America in the past, he spoke of the task it has to perform in the present, and then expatiated on the assured brightness of the country's future and the duties of good citizens.

"If the average man is brave and hard-working and clean-living, if the average woman has the qualities which make a good wife and good mother, if each has self-respect, and each realizes that the greatest thing in life is the chance to do service—then we may well say that the nation is secure. We must continue to work, who does to do his duty by the public who is a bad neighbor, an idler, an unconsiderate and selfish husband, a neglectful father. So also we must condemn the woman who, whether from cowardice or coldness, from selfishness or carelessness, or lack of all true womanly virtue, fails to do her right by her great and all-sacrificing duties of wifehood and motherhood. We admire good man; but we admire a good woman more. We believe in her more."

"All the world over is done the man who does his duty well, and the woman who does the duties of the home and family make all the men the deiters of all women. No human being has a greater title to respect than the mother who does her full duty, who bears and protects her helpless children, so that they may grow up strong and healthy, and not national decadence, so that in quality and in quantity our people shall increase. The measure of our belief in and respect for the good man and the good woman must be the sum of our admiration of the man and the woman who, whether from viciousness or softness or from vapid folly, fails to do each his or her special sphere."

BANK CLOSES ITS DOORS

THEFTS FORCE THE NATIONAL OF ALLEGHENY TO SUSPEND.

Ernest Efforts of Pittsburgh Financiers to Prevent the Failure Are Entirely Without Avail.

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 18.—It was officially announced Sunday night that the Allegheny National bank, whose former cashier, William Montgomery, is now ill, specifically charged with the theft of $100,000, had closed its doors of the bank and of the trust company. The department are trying to fathom still larger apparent discrepancies in the bank's funds, would not reopen for business Monday.

Instead a notice on the door announced that the manager of the currency has taken charge, and will close up the affairs of the bank.

President Dupont conferred with Members Bishop and Owens of the board in regard to strike settlement, and while he agreed to arbitrate some points he would not concede the one thing in which the men stand determined.

"In no case will I arbitrate the reinstatement of the men at the expense of those now employed," he said. "I shall stick for the seniority of run them, now working getting the preference."

President Dupont was asked whether he would arbitrate all other points. He replied that he would arbitrate no points until the lawlessness had ceased.

"I am not in the right to strike in the face of strikers and I will not confer with them until they purge themselves of the lawlessness element."

Many Deeds of Violence.

Deeds of violence continued to be committed as part of strike sympathizers throughout the day. A brick was held up striking the conductor in the head, knocking him unconscious. His conductress was also struck, it is thought, and will recover.

Cars Carr Police.

Trolley cars were cut, crews were driven from their cars, and in some instances, non-union men were attacked by strike sympathizers. Trolley wires were cut and obstructions placed in the car tracks at many points.

The bank as a city depository carries over $100,000,000 of the city's funds and as an active savings depositary, over $50,000,000 of state funds. It is possible that the city may experience some inconvenience in having the bank closed up for a time, but it is understood that both the state and city are protected against actual loss by bonds of surety companies.

Pittsburgh, Pa., May 19.—Following the filing of an injunction petition in the United States circuit court, the Pittsburgh district court late Sunday, Attorney C. E. Patterson was appointed receiver for Carothers & Co., one of the largest brokerage firms in the city.

In the course of the proceedings it was learned that the bank had been closed by Receiver Patterson, who said: "The firm had a large amount of the bank's stock collateral and when the bank closed the stock was no longer available in the firm's loans."

WORSE RIOTING IN CLEVELAND

HEAD OF LITTLE BOY CUT OFF BY CAR—IS TAKEN HOME WHEN DEAD.

Several Shots Are Fired in Pitched Battles. Two Cars are Burned to the Trucks by the Mobs in Frenzied Anger.

Cleveland, May 20.—Rioting became more general and serious in the street railway strike late yesterday. The first death, while not a part of the strike, but an incident to it, occurred when Yester, Wolinski, four years old, was run over by a motorcar driven by an inexperienced motorman.

A crowd quickly gathered and they would have lynched the motorman had he not turned on full speed and escaped.

The boy was despatched and in the confusion it is said, the head was hurried to the lad's home while an ambulance took the body to the morgue.

In Lakewood a car was stopped and the crew fired upon. Four persons were injured and one was injured and the car was burned to the tracks.

The burning of a Clifton bungalow in Lakewood was the most serious riot of the strike. The car was stopped by a log thrown across the track behind a railroad bridge. The crowd gathered around the car and the car burst into flames. The car was surrounded by a crowd of men and women who had gathered to watch the burning. The car was completely destroyed.

St. Paul, May 14.—Governor John A. Johnson was today made the candidate of his state for the presidential nomination by the Democratic party. Mid-seas of the wildest confusion and dissension, the convention of the Minnesota was launched in a manner that indicates that the "Tall Pine" will have one state solidly behind him in the battle at the Denver convention, and with a significant victory, and its significance increased by the representative body of Minnesota Democrats that attended the convention hall. Although secession was in the air and Bryan Democrats were standing ready to bolt, it was in the end seen that it was a Johnson convention through and through. His followers controlled the organization, dictated the names of the candidates, and wrote the resolutions that closed the convention with a unanimous vote upon every move of the convention. The enthusiasm was excessive.

The first cheers for Minnesota's entry into the race were given Friday after working the delegates up to a high pitch by severely attacking the Bryan men in this state for what he called the villain attack that had ever threatened the name of Governor Johnson.

At the auditorium there was a picture scene sight. The different couples were assigned to their places designated by the chairmen. Some of the delegates unable to find places on the main floor were assigned to seats on the stage. The American colors were draped about the proscenium of the stage, and the banners of the various states and other Democratic leaders were in evidence. Hand mutes added a light touch to the situation, and made the place for the most part a dead affair. The galleries were crowded, made up mostly of Bryan men, the majority of the contestants departed. At the close of his address, Andrew St. Paul, publisher of the Duluth Herald, delegate of the Duluth delegation, was chosen secretary of the convention, being escorted to the platform by Senator J. C. Marcy, of Ramsey county, and A. C.

Wais, publisher of the Duluth Herald. Delegate Wheaton, of Hennepin county, made the motion that the following be chosen as assistant secretaries to the convention. John Casey, of Todd county, and Fred Schlipin, of St. Cloud, and Frank Battley, of Ramsey county. The motion of Mr. Wheaton passed.

The Committees.

Resolutions—Chairman C. D. O'Brien, St. Paul.
Credentials—Chairman, Meyer J. Aronson.
Arrangements—Chairman, Senator H. F. Walz, Le Sueur.

The credentials committee voted unanimously to reject the contest of the Hennepin county Bryan men. T. O'Brien, chairman of the committee, read a resolution came forward and presented its report. He stated that it had been signed by all except T. J. Knox of Jackson and W. J. Whipple of Winona. Mr. Knox presented the minority report and moved its adoption as an amendment.

The Platform.

We affirm our allegiance to the principles of the party of Jefferson and Jackson and pledge our entire and faithful support to the candidate for the presidency whom the national Democratic party in its wisdom shall select at the convention to be held in Denver next July.

We declare that the best interest of the state can be served by the prompt and upright administration of public affairs of this state during the past four years. With the cooperation of the legislature and other public officers our wise and also expert advice has secured a system of taxation of all her citizens which has been well received and public duties discharged with efficiency and thoroughness.

We declare that the high protective tariff of the Bryan party has been a great祸害 to the people, has destroyed the equilibrium which should exist between the producing classes, and is still the chief rampart behind which predatory wealth is entrenched.

The population of the new state was 150,037. The state offers, who had been elected in October of the previous year, assumed their duties on May 24, 1883. The Hon. H. H. Sibley, former governor; William Howard, Lieutenant governor; Francis Baason, secretary of state; George W. Armstrong, treasurer; W. F. Dunbar, auditor; Charles H. Berry, attorney general; Dr. Charles E. Flanigan, Isaac Water, associate justices. The clerk of the supreme court was Jacob J. Noah, and the reporter, Harvey Officer; James Shields, and Henry M. Tracy, delegates to United States senator; J. M. Cavanaugh, democrat, representative in congress from the first district, and W. W. Phelps, democrat, from the second district.

Railroads and Labor.

The corporate form of organization has been freely used as a cloak to hide overcapitalization, reckless speculation in illegal business methods. State corporations and great industrial enterprises and public service corporations is necessary for the continued welfare of the American people.

Railroads and Labor.

We recognize that the commercial and transportation business of the country can be conducted more easily through the instrumentalities of large aggregations of capital, but that fact makes it more than ever necessary that the rights of the individual citizen should be zealously guarded. It is the right of the laborer to do his work, it is necessary that those who labor with their hands should organize for their own protection. The demand of labor shall be granted for reasonable hours of work, for the compulsory adoption of safety appliances in connection with machinery, for arbitration and for the modification of the rules of common law fixing the liability of the master for injuries to servant so that in the future our jurisprudence will be such as to meet the needs of industry will bear the risk.

We favor progressive and practical measures for the taxation of incomes, the establishment of postal savings banks, and safeguarding of bank deposits along lines suggested by William J. Bryan.

State and Nation.

We believe that the powers ceded to the federal government by the states through the constitution in its present form are ample. Notwithstanding the closer relations of the people with the nation, the concentration of power has established a too great centralization of power as dangerous as when the constitution was framed.

The dangers to be apprehended from centralization of power are already apparent, for under autocratic leadership congress has become inactive and no longer responds to the demands of the people. The concentration of power is being rapidly extended to a point which threatens the extinction of state autonomy.

In Governor John A. Johnson, Minnesota's own son, we have a courageous candidate for president of ability, integrity, and humor, a constructive statesman, who holds no brief from any class, one who from early youth has been a leader in the cause of private life and earnestness as to win the love, respect and confidence of all who know him. In public life he has always been a leader, and the people of his state and nation regardless of condition in life or position.

We therefore instruct our delegates to vote as a unit for, and continue to vote as long as necessary to secure the nomination of Hon. John A. Johnson, as the candidate for president.

John A. Johnson, two hours ago, was recognized and read the names of those stated as delegates at large and alternates at large. There were to be 100 alternates at large, and 100 alternates at small. The galleries were crowded, made up mostly of Bryan men, the majority of the contestants departed. At the close of his address, Andrew St. Paul, publisher of the Duluth Herald, was chosen secretary of the convention, being escorted to the platform by Senator J. C. Marcy, of Ramsey county, and A. C.

MINNESOTA.

Minneapolis—May 11, the state of Minnesota was 50 years old. On that day, fifty years ago the telegraph station nearest to Minneapolis was Prairie du Chien, Wis. The news of the admission of the state to the Union was flashed over the wires from Washington to the little Wisconsin town only a few minutes after President James Buchanan had attached his signature to the bill.

R. O'Brien, chairman of the committee on public works, read a resolution forwarded by the House of Representatives to the Senate, which was voted down. The resolution was to present a copy of the Constitution to the people most interested, and to have a copy of the good fortune of the state, 50 years later, when the steamer Milwaukee, at 6 a.m. arrived in St. Paul bringing both official and private documents of the auspicious event. The newspaper was published in the afternoon of that day and followed them on the 14th with liberal extracts from papers published "down the river" brought on the afternoon of the 13th, by the steamer Gray Eagle.

The Legislature began its session of three days earlier than the Senate, and adjourned on the 14th with liberal extracts from papers published "down the river" brought on the afternoon of the 13th, by the steamer Gray Eagle.

When Miss Matty Found Out

By Edith Bernard

(Copyright)

All her life had Miss Matty been a mere insignificant, a cinder, a member of a large family; her clothes were those handed down by her from sisters who had outgrown them. When she grew older she was occasionally called upon to teach the music selected when the other girls were absent. Even in the matter of a love affair, she did not have a lover who was absolutely her own. While Andrew Trulove had a place for her, it was always because of a falling out with his old sweetheart and he returned to her at her first smile.

So when Mr. Spranz had lookedatty to make him to take the place of the Mrs. Spranz who was gone, it seemed the most inevitable thing in the world that she should do so. For her, it was going into a dream.

After the wonder of it all, the joy of possession had come upon her. It was hers, all hers! For she gradually realized that the new home indeed, her own, and one from which she could now be disengaged, that the house and the husband were hers, and not the less hers for having belonged to a former Mrs. Spranz. There was not the slightest thought of jealousy, her simple heart, there was only gratitude.

She would stand in the doorway of a room and wonder how the other Mrs. Spranz had cleaned it. She tried to learn the plans and methods of the woman who had owned it all before it became hers; for there entered her heart a great ambition; not only would she show her affection and gratitude to Mr. Spranz by being a comfortable first wife had made him, but she would pay her predecessor the tribute of doing it precisely in the first Mrs. Spranz's way! But the idea once conceived, she had some difficulty in carrying it out. With what? Her husband was cipher of speaking about his first wife. Miss Matty feared that his sense of loss was still keen, and thought it rather indecent to bring up such a subject, and when she did, on many occasions, she saw how Mrs. Spranz had made the brown bread he was so fond of, and insisted upon having every day. Mr. Spranz had seemed so uneasy, that when he had gone poor Miss Matty looked pensively with tear-filled eyes at the potluck, and said, as she so often said:

"She must 'a' been a mighty kind woman, to be mourned like that!"

Then one evening Mr. Spranz came home with the letter, saying his first wife's cousin, Julia Keene, was coming on a visit for a few days.

In the two days before Mrs. Keene's arrival, Miss Matty worked hard to have a house in order; and when she was all alone, she would sit and wait for Mr. Spranz to bring the guest, she went into the dining room, and glanced again at the portrait, as if for courage.

"Oh, I hope I have everything all right!" she said, and clasped her hands nervously together. Then she wiped her eyes, and said, "I always did think she did it just to the devil Jostah. Comfortable! Well, I guess he wasn't comfortable."

"Well, you got it all right," was saying. "I never did tell John he needed flowers." She nodded toward the figure of timid hesitation in the doorway. "There you are," she called out reassuringly, and in a moment she was kissing Miss Matty cordially on the cheek. It was just then Mr. Spranz had seen his first places looks," she said. "Julia never could see a clump of flowers; said green grass was good enough for her, and plenty of trouble to take care of. I like something real bright an' cheerful myself. So I'm glad to see your taste runs the same way."

Everything in the house called for comment, and always brought forth approval. Miss Matty was so filled with amazement at the things Mrs. Keene was revealing, however, that she almost forgot to be glad at the high words of praise. But it was at supper that she received the greatest shock of the day.

"Land, you must think I'm compin', puttin' flowers in the middle of the table," explained the first Mrs. Spranz's cousin, when Miss Matty summed up her hostessing in the dining room. "Not so bad, I like it; I like to take a little pains for folks myself. I like to be the one pains is took for. But Julia wasn't that kind, was she, Josiah?" What? Oh, yes, I ain't sayin' but what Julia was a good woman, and my own cousin, too; but I guess you know she done it for you."

Miss Matty, this brown bread is as good as any I ever eat, if not better; but you oughtn't 'a' made it especially for me!"

It was only the desirability of sampling the excellence of the meal that gave the only name; but Miss Matty had a chance to say:

"I'm real glad you like it, Miss Keene. I make it fresh every day, for Mr. Spranz's used to it that way, an' I want to do everything just like she did."

Miss Keene laid down her buttered slice of bread, and looked at Miss Matty, then at Mr. Spranz.

When Mr. and Mrs. Spranz went up to bed that night, no word was spoken between them, nor did Mr. Spranz meet his wife's questioning eyes. As the days passed, he became evidently depressed and uneasy. He avoided Miss Keene and her constant stream of talk more and more, and his heart became anxious at his failing appetite. Miss Matty herself, good soul, was daily receiving faint dissatisfaction. It was gradually becoming clear to her that the reputation of the first Mrs. Spranz's character was not, perhaps, the correct one, but her loyal heart refused to admit the truth. "I know about it, but I can't," said Miss Keene one morning after Mr. Spranz had left the house. "I want to tell you right now, though, that I'm not the bad woman I ever saw. You are a much better housekeeper than I am myself, which I ain't sayin' much; but I want to tell you also that you are a real good cook, and I like your food. Spranz's foolin' you the way he's been doin'. His first wife was my own cousin, named after the same aunt I was named for, too. They ain't nothin' but lies that you hear tellin' about her. Here you are workin' in yourself to death, tryin' to do like she did. Do you know how she did?"

"Well, I'm goin' to do my best to make you comfortable," said Miss Keene, smiling.

"Julia never made him comfortable a day in her life!"

For do you suppose she made fresh bread for him every day? Do you really suppose she lay him down in the best velvet sofa at all, much less with his boots on? Do you think this house was bright an' cheerful an'

so on?

"I Thought I Could Hold My Tongue!

I Thought I Could Hold My Tongue!

pleasant for him, when Julia was away? Well, it wasn't Julia had dyspepsia, an' never cooked a thing she couldn't eat herself. They was mighty fine things she ate, eat so it was mighty little trouble. Josiah eat, too. She kept all the shutters drawn in so's not to fade the carpet an' the wall paper, an' Josiah had to get an' on the kitchen door, so's not to tramp dirt through the front hall. He just leaves flowers, and Julia likes flowers, too. I guess she said she liked grass better, but I alwads did think she did it just to the devil Jostah. Comfortable! Well, I guess he wasn't comfortable. If he ever had any pleasures or luxuries it was outside this house, and when she was away he wouldn't let him smoke cigarettes, because she said she could not stand the smell of tobacco in his hair an' his clothes; an' here he's smokin' in every room in the house Say anything about her? Of course he don't. He just lays back an' lets you do for him. I guess he's afraid he's afraid to give you so much as a word o' thanks for it for fear you'll find out he never had it before an' slack up on it. If ever a man was better off without a woman than was Josiah Spranz when Julia passed away! Land! She never gives you a chance to say anything, and she never looks so far as I ever heard, and she never did one thing to make him comfortable. If she was my own first cousin a hundred times over, I'd have to say it—she was just about as mean a woman as ever drew breath of air. An' here you are settin' her on above your mantel to go an' worship 'em!"

She was so intent upon unburdening her mind that she had not noticed the figure standing in the room beyond. At his unexpected arrival both women looked up in amazement; but before even Mrs. Keene could speak, Miss Matty had closed her husband's arms around her.

When he let her go, Mr. Spranz stopped down and awkwardly kissed her.

"I'm mighty glad you know it, Matthy," he whispered.

Miss Matty put both arms about his neck, and drew his head down to hers. "O Joy!" she cried.

On Sunday morning Mr. Spranz was the first downstairs. His wife found the fire burning when she came down later. At breakfast Mrs. Keene looked questioningly toward a bare spot on the table. Mr. Spranz looked, too, and said:

"I thought I'd send the crayon portrait of Julia to her sister in Nashua."

"Why, yes," said Mrs. Keene, pleased.

Miss Matty only looked at her husband with adoring eyes and blushed.

PARSOL HANDLER VERY RICH.

Precious Metals, Fashioned into Beautiful Shapes, Employed.

MILK AN EXCELLENT COSMETIC.

Can Be Used in Many Ways to Very Good Advantage.

Milk is a cosmetic that women of to-day would do well to include in their list of complexion washes.

For example, when a woman is very tired, her face has been exposed to the sun and she wears out of her bottoms she can use a hot milk compress. For this purpose the milk—not—should be put into a basin, and then two soft pieces of muslin, large enough to cover the face, should be placed over the liquid. When these cloths are saturated with milk that is as hot as the hand can endure, the woman should lie down and spread the compresses over her face. These should remain on until the cloths have cooled.

The muslin should not be wrung out, but should be allowed to dry in a stream of air from near the fire, and as rapidly as one cools another warm compress must be applied.

This treatment should continue for ten minutes, and then the face should be rinsed with cold water.

On getting up the face should be wiped with a soft cloth, damp with water, and then thoroughly dried. After the treatment the skin will be perfectly smooth and of a healthy pink.

Some time ago we published

the following article:

"The milk bath for the whole body, developed in the circus attached to it, is beneficial in itself and the added merit of being inexpensive."

When preparing these baths a rich quality of fluid is desirable, because of the extra amount of cream. But skimmed milk is effective.

For ordinary baths, take from six quarts to three gallons may be used.

This is poured in, and then hot water in sufficient quantity to cover the body is added. In this one lies for 15 or 20 minutes, and then the bath should be continued, toning to the skin as well as restful to the nerves. If this and milk applications to the face are made every other day, improvement in the general looks cannot fail.

For those who can afford it, sweet cream may be applied. Only a very small quantity should be used at a time, for the instant it becomes sour not only is it virtue lost, but it is danger of infection to the skin.

For ordinary baths when water is employed as a cosmetic is hamamelis acid.

One-half teaspoonful of this powder is stirred through the cream after it has been dissolved in a wine-glass full of water. This is used as ordinary cold cream it will feed the tissues and soften the skin in a remarkable way. It is not put on until after thorough bathing in warm water, and then as much should be rubbed in as the pores can be made to hold.

FROM CITY TO FARM

"Ye who listen with credence to the whimsies of fancy, who pursue with ardor the fancies of those who assert that man will perform the penance of youth, and that the delusions of the present day will be the penance of the morrow—attend to the history of the town of Abberlour."

The Rural Swain

"I'm a swain quite unknown,
An' I peaked in three, the wind,
An' that sort of blab all alone,
Is the one end to him."

Cupid's first overturing in the country. It is hard-worked little lad he is indeed in the rural districts. If it be true or false that it is "love that makes the world go round," it is nearly a certainty that the manhood for the boy between 17 and 21 in the farm lands, is that detectable land of Heart's Desire, bounded on the east, west, north and south by the vision of his "loving girl." And so, by dreams of various circuses, band parades, dances, Sunday school gatherings, "flea frys," picnics, barbecues, and buggsy rides.

To see a boy emerge from the circus after a week of performances, from the faltering bather of 17 or 18, is watching marionettes to behold, and instructive to contemplate. The transformation is invariably accomplished by means of a red-wheeled buggy. This really marks the time when he begins to grow up, and the boyishness emerges into the fierce white light of country society. He becomes at once a target for the side-splitting witticisms of the country editor with his "Jester Bedeviled" series, to be displayed in every popular town in the Ossgood farm now. "Sunday nights, Hey! Jake! When shall we send our congratulations?" This makes "Jake" feel as though he had drawn a capital prize at some lottery.

A boy without a buggy is absolutely not in the "running" at all. A great deal of "sparking" is done while on the road to the various entertainments, and Cupid in the country would be especially appropriate with wings for the boys using them to attract girls, and to scare the girls and impress their sweethearts with their prowess as drivers. A boy who is driving "the old man's rig, feels as important as if he was driving a team of horses, and every one knew it. But with a new buggy with a heavy near-fur robe for winter, and a fancy blanket for summer, and a new buggy whip, and a "steppin' nay to leave the dust in 'the other fellow's face,' the rural swain is in his element, and on the top wave of popularity.

We saw a great deal of the evolution of the rustic cavalier at the farm Saturday and Sundays especially were his busy days, and the road in front of the house was scaloped with the tracks of his buggy. It may be sure that the question of dress was a most particular point with him, and to save time and be strictly en regale, he always wore "patent leather" shoes. Soft hats were the style, black in the fall and winter, and light in the summer. The colors of the buggies were prone to silk mufflers and elaborate ties, and were really gotten up regardless.

As is usual in such cases, there is always some one boy who is known as "the best dressed fellow in the township," and the rustic cavalier, too, lived up to the reputation, even if it took nearly all he can earn to appear with the latest novelties in dress. Some of the boys were variably the best dancers, the best boxers, the best swimmers, skaters, etc., but the most important member of society in the community was "Wally McAffeys" of the district, who was the boy who was the best dancer and "caller-off" at the dances, for he could make or unmake either a boy or a girl who wanted to shine at these assemblies.

A curious feature of the "couping" which was carried on, was the gatherings of the young boys and girls who played games among themselves, but who did not dance. These embryo society events would often be attended by eager crowds of as many as 20 or 40 couples, most of them girls and boys of average size, and the reason was, that the young people were not yet strong enough to stand home early, and it was as if Cupid was merely making tentative arrangements for more serious affairs. Sometimes at these "little parties" as they were called, there would be an attempt to have a quadrille or two before the party broke up, some of the girls would try their wings before "padding" out at the regulation dances.

Then after a year or more you would see some of the boys and girls who attended these "parties" at dances, and you would know that nevermore would they seem to be the young people of the town, that had fair entered the arena of society, and were now excited by the boys who owned their own buggies, and who were preparing to enter, the doubtful state of matrimony in the immediate future.

Boys and girls many early in the family life, and many never married, the boys at 21, the girls at 18 or younger. A good many are married, boys before they are 20, girls at 18. This makes for early grandparentage, and extensive families. Courtship, therefore, is confined to a period of from two to three years, to five at the furthest. A year's courtship is a fairly long time and marriage and giving in marriage occupies but a brief space, all things considered, in rural community.

When the staving and flaring circus advertisements first made their appearance on the dusty billboards in the neighboring towns, there was no immediate great excitement and much talk about who was going with whom and what the girls were going to wear. Then the girls were quite as much heartburning among themselves as the boys, and the girls, who had been told at Newport, and the amount of crisp sarcasm indulged in by the girls was as usual in most cases made and practised. The boys were shown off to get some, and any means to get out and do a little extra work was always snapped up in a hurry.

There were always a great many, at some one time, larger towns, but an even greater ones on the neighboring roads for 30 miles around. Those who could go by rail, but the main body of the smaller towns would only go by buggy, and the small boys went in buggies.

As we had seen a tiger or two in our town, these events did not excite me, but were beyond our control, but we rather lost caste, I imagine, by staying away from where "the monkeys of the jungle" and the collected hordes of rhinoceroses delighted themselves, and the buggies, riders confected. A long line of buggies, with a joyously anticipatory couple in each vehicle would pass the house in the early morning, and a boy who was to be wed would be gowned always with "paint" going to the circus?" A liberal spending among the swains was sure to make a hit, as it was supposed a "line" could be gotten on the road.

Red-lemonade, peanuts, and the like, after the church dinner, the "fixing-up," the sideshows, the fortune tellers—all were several ways in which the "nimble shillings" could be induced to change hands, and about midnight the rigs would come trudging back, an occasional "Sing, all you girls, Sing like the devil!" De organ's busted.—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

"Bridge whist," needless to say, was unknown. "Progressive euchre" an unknown quantity. "Receptions" there were not made at the hotel, or any such high-adolescent performances, they were unheard of. Cupid depended mostly on the red-wheeled buggies and the country dances, and his success justified his selections. Of course the time-honored "fixing-up" was still in vogue, and down goes with this interesting process, however, is mostly confined to Sunday nights, and may be, and usually is protracted, until around Monday morning, say close to one o'clock a.m. Some Sunday evenings, the girls in farm houses shuns out on the fields, and inside the houses the various couples talked over their dances, and parties, their neighbor hood topics and matters of local interest, and scanned the family album, and gossiped and bantered one another.

And here, too, Cupid appeared he and, matrimony inclined, wore the webs of mutual trust and confidence between the couple, and aided in unfolding the mystery of divine creation. The stars glowed, and the trees swayed in still fields. Inside, perhaps the organ sounded softly, or a fire glowed in an old-fashioned fireplace or in a more modern stove.

After the "old folks" went to bed and there was nothing to disturb the quiet of indoors but the motions of the two young voices, Cupid had to keep himself to other times and spaces, confident that his spell was already progressing bravely.

In the country papers the "correspondents" from the various quarters of the township regularly reported all these new courting "beauties" and the like, until the next Monday morning, but usually there was very little trouble at the concerts. The music was the best they had, and if you did not like it, you could go home. We attended at least one "home concert" and the girls were in full swing, and of the "catch-as-catch-can" order, open bazaar rules, classic holds barred, and every fellow for himself until the finale, when they were all supposed to unite for the end of the piece.

At the country dances the swains appeared in full force, dancing until daybreak, and with their best "bills of fare" to sustain them. These were the most important of all rural functions, and by the time a fellow began to take a girl regularly to these events, there was no doubt but that he had been "hooked, played and landed," and that there was something shortly to be heard of in the matrimonial line. And yet, the girls were so course and free love went astray, and we see some one of the boys driving swiftly with a new girl on the seat beside him, and the girl he used to drive with appearing in public with another cavalier, and by these "presentments" we know that the silent cord had been broken, and that Cupid had received a "back set."

The "flea frys" were the old and young congregated, but the boys and girls never missed these exciting occasions. They were usually held in some grove near a river or lake, and the men were early to catch enough fish to supply the dinner for all. The women brought huge baskets loaded down with everlastings, and in the way of good things to eat, no article an organ would be brought along, a platform built, and to the music of fiddle and organ, a dance would wind up the entertainment.

All boats in the vicinity would be pressed into service, and the woods would ring with the good times the folks were having. Impromptu awnings would be installed, and the shrieks of the girls who were being hoisted heavy-and-shaken the leaves in the branches above.
