St. Patrick's Play A Grand Success In Every Way

CROWD APPRECIATES SAME

EXPIRES FRIDAY

W. H. Russell Dies Of Heart-trouble Friday P. M.

SUCGUMBS IN 65th YEAR

It Was Readily Conceded That It Was The Best Rendition Of The Play Ever Seen Around Here

Last Friday evening the Home Dramatic Co. gave the "Shannon Boys" in Stok's Hall. The hall was filled at an early hour and by the time the curtain rose there was hardly standing room. The reserved seats, which were on sale at the drug store, were all taken long before the doors opened, and those who thought they would wait until they arrived at the hall before purchasing seats, had to be satisfied with a back seat, and many were compelled to stand.

The company had been rehearsing for the last two months, and to say each member played his part in a creditable manner, is putting it mildly. They all did fine, and played like professionals. There wasn't an amateur in the bunch.

The play was given in order to raise money for the new Catholic Church, which will be built here this coming summer. When completed, this will be the finest church in this part of the state, and will certainly be a credit to the village.

We have been informed that the company is talking of giving the play in our neighboring towns, and if they do we can assure our readers that they will get their money's worth. If they should see fit to present the play here again in the near future, it is a certainty that they will be greeted by a large house.

Lack of space forbids further mention of the play, but as we stated before, each one executed his part in a highly creditable manner. A great deal of credit is due the company for furnishing such a fine evening's entertainment to our citizens.

OLD SHACK BURNS

Last Friday night, during the play which was being produced in Stok's Hall, an old barn, belonging to Mrs. Otto Kowalko, burned to the ground. The origin of the fire is unknown but it is thought to be of incendiary origin. A launch belonging to Tom Connor and a quantity of hay was consumed in the flames. The structure was partly covered by insurance.

A BROKEN LIFE

A True Story Of The Life Of A College Boy

AND THREE BROKEN HEARTS

As Depicted By Rev. Cap. Kingsbury, Santa Anna, California, In The Life Boat. Boyhood

The boy was born in an elegant home, surrounded by the many rare things that wealth prompts liberal hearts to buy. The loving ministrations of a proud father and mother were his. The baby boy grew with the years into boyhood, youth and young manhood, and had all the blessings belonging to a Christian home,—father and mother's advice, care and prayers, and an older sister as a companion.

One day as the little family circle was gathered about the well spread table, father, mother, sister, all talked of the coming departure of their boy,—he must have a college education,—nothing else would do; and the boy is eager for it. So it is decided that the study shall begin this coming autumn.

The day dawns all too soon when this boy shall leave home for a long season. As he sets out for the scene of his studies, father goes with him and sees that all is satisfactorily arranged, then returns home. Our boy now settles down to work and right hard does he study, and for father's sake and mother's sake and sister's sake and for his own credit he desires to win highest honors. The months come and go, years pass and soon our boy is ready to graduate. The evidences are the best, that with the final days will come victories, and our boy will be crowned with highest honors. Father and mother and sister must go down and see him graduate. When the boy stands upon the platform the hearts of the father, mother and sister quicken and glow with loving pride, and when the young man takes his seat the people rise en masse and pour forth a volume of applause that makes the arches of the great building ring gloriously.

Many a hand claps the hand of this young man who seems born to be a king among men, whose rare gifts place him in the forefront among his fellows. Mother's kiss and father's benediction and sister's fond words are given and they depart for home while the son remains a few days the guest of some city college boys.

One night after the return of the boy to his home, about the midnight hour the mother was awakened out of sleep by an unusual disturbance at the front door. She awoke her husband and together they went to the door to learn the cause of all this cursing, and noise and confusion. As the door opened what a revelation came to that father and mother as they gazed into the face of their only begotten son, he, he, maudlin drunk, was defiling the atmosphere with vile curses and drunken speech.

No pen can describe the horror that filled the minds and hearts of those parents as the awful fact dawned upon them; that their son, so talented, so noble, so honored, had come home, drunk! The son falls at their feet in helplessness while the broken-hearted father and mother lift him and carry him to his room and lay him upon his bed. What a sorry sight!

Now the light begins between parents and friends and the whiskey devil and evil influences, for the salvation of the only son. Prayers, loving entreaties, anxious, faithful care, all fail. The boy is a bond slave to the

THE BIG BANQUET

The Sunday School Is Treated To A Big Feed

A MOST ENJOYABLE TIME

The M. E. Sunday School Is Treated To A Real Good Supper Monday Evening. Locker Speaks

Last Monday evening the banquet which came as a result of the contest that has been going on in the M. E. Sunday School for the past three months was held at the church when over 150 scholars, teachers, and parents sat down to tables set in a double hollow square in the audience room of the church.

The guests were informed that the doors would not open until 6:30, and by that time the walks in front of the church were crowded with the little folks and parents. Rev. Parish then came out and announced that the guests would be seated by classes, and while this was going on the orchestra furnished the music. Each plate had the name of the person on it, so that when entering the church all one had to do was to find their name and then be seated.

After all had partaken of the good things to eat, County Superintendent, Otis, who had been appointed toastmaster, made a few remarks and then proceeded to announce the literary program. Superintendent Piper was called upon and was immediately followed by Rev. Parish. Both gentlemen were taken by surprise, not knowing that their names were upon the program. Nevertheless both talks were very ably delivered.

Frank Gottry was next, singing a solo, entitled "Faithful as the Stars Above." Miss Thomas, of Rush City, then played a piano solo, after which Miss Gierie sang a solo. This was followed by a piano duet, played by the Misses Thomas and Chapin, and was very good. Miss Witttrup's class of eight little boys sang a song, entitled "True Blue," which was followed with a talk by Mr. Locker, of the State Sunday School Association. The benediction was offered by Rev. Parish.

GRASPING THE TRUTH

There can be no question but there is a great change going on in the minds of the people relative to political conditions. A few years ago the development and wonderful expansion of business and the increased demands made upon the resources of the country for real opportunity for advancement made it necessary that legislation along untried lines be adopted. This legislation, in the spirit of the time which was decidedly "commercial" was often rushed through the legislatures by means of political methods far from being above suspicion. This was the period just following the civil war. It became a common thing that men should say that in order to carry certain measures through the state legislature, through the county board or the city council it would require "money." Money was used for this purpose and it was used openly. The writer of this once heard a man prominent in the politics of this county say that with half a car load of beer and a barrel of whiskey he could carry Pine county any time. There is no question but a time when the saloons of Pine county controlled its politics through the money that was spent over the bar is not far behind us. Money has been spent in Pine county within the last few years for political purposes, and much of this has been placed with the proprietors of saloons or with "spenders" who would make themselves "good fellows" for the purpose of carrying votes. This method has been followed and is being followed today to a large extent. There isn't a county in the state that is free from this kind of politics. There isn't a state in the Union that does not have the same thing repeated year after year. The system simply is an outgrowth of conditions which have prevailed in the past. The last ten years has witnessed a change in conditions. The man who would state that he could carry this county, or any other county with a car load of beer would be hoisted out of the community. The whole trouble arose in the first place from the seeming necessity of short-cuts to desired ends. Another thing which brought about this condition was the large percentage of foreign born population in many of our frontier counties. These foreigners being unacquainted with our methods were controlled to a large extent by the more educated and often most disreputable members of their nationality. The time is not far in the past when two or three men in Chicago county got together and scooped up the county ticket. They may have been uneducated, uneducated, but they were not entirely ignorant and they were the men it was necessary to "sway" Chicago was no different from other counties. Pine county was the same and so was every county in the state. For the last few years there has been much discussion of the political conditions and the press of the country has been full of charges of corruption. The people seem to be making considerable noise along this line, and the public press has been so corrupt in times past that it was well known that in order to get the support of certain papers, it was necessary to put up money, and they are in a large measure the papers who are having the most to say about political corruption today. The passage of the direct primary act gives this two-supper advice additional power, and they are using it to their own advantage today. Some of our large city dailies have in the past and are today in the market for sale to the man who will pay them the highest price, and they are the same men who are taking so much about the use of money in politics. Turn can be but one way to drive money out of politics, and that is by raising the standard of the average voter. Money cannot be driven out of politics by means of legislation. No law can make a man honest, nor can a statute be devised which will prevent the unlawful use of money. The laws requiring the publication of campaign expenditures is a farce. It is so openly violated that the man who is on the inside knows it to be laughing stock. It is so easily evaded that it is a disgrace. The people who advocate these laws know that they are in the habit of violating them every day themselves. They know that their campaigns are run by the use of money in violation of these laws, or what is worse, by traffic in public office. The people are beginning to understand these things and they will some day reach the point where they will go back to the "town meeting" method of making their nominations and will rid their politics of the machinery that is devised in the interest of the corrupt and for the purpose of misleading the people. Simplify your politics and you can clean them more easily.

whiskey appetite. After two years of battling, the father, a wealthy manufacturer, goes from saloon to saloon all over the city and begs of the men who run them, and at a great cost binds them not to sell to his darling boy. Each saloonist had a price, save one. All agreed to the proposition of the heart-broken father, save one. He railed about personal liberty, and he would not sell his right to sell whiskey to any man at any price. So it came about that the poor, deluded boy gave his patronage to this "son of personal liberty." Oh, what an example of that sort of liberty!—the kind of liberty that makes one man the bond slave of one of the devil's own. Each day this poor, misguided boy found his way to the den, the man-trap of this advocate of "personal liberty." Each day he imbibed freely of the liquors sold him, until health and strength bade farewell to the reeling, maudlin sot. One day, not having strength enough to walk across the street to the bar-room of his "friend," (the devoted son of liberty) he got down on face and hands and undertook to crawl over, and expired amid the dust and dirt of the street of his own native town. Thus ended the career of this noble son of noble parentage.

Of the dark, dreary funeral hour I need not speak. Of the tears that flowed I need not tell you, dear reader. Of the awful woe that filled the hearts of friends, school-mates, companions of youth and young manhood, I can only give you a hint, and must hasten to the end of this painful tale.

Before six months had passed away a silver-haired mother was laid at rest beside a drunkard's grave. An appropriate inscription for her tombstone would be "Died of a Broken Heart." Right soon another new-made grave—the sister, too, died of a broken heart. In less than two years the father was laid in a grave beside his own dear ones. Dissonant No. Sickness? No. Accident? No. Just died of a broken heart, that's all. Who cares? Make way for the saloon! On the monument bearing the family name and erected over this family burial spot, "The Fruit of the Saloon Traffic" would be a suitable inscription to put thereon.

We're Opposed to Mail Order Concerns Because—

They have never contributed a cent to furthering the interests of our farmers. Every cent received by them from this community is a direct loss to our merchants. In almost every case their prices can be met right here, without delay in receiving goods and the possibility of mistakes in filling orders.

But—The natural human trait is to buy where goods are cheapest. Local pride is usually secondary in the game of life as played today.

Therefore Mr. Merchant and Business Men, meet your competition with your own weapons—advertising.

Advertise! The local field is yours. All you need do is to send your bill of the representative offered. An advertisement in this paper will carry your message into hundreds of homes in this community. It is the most medium of selling your goods and services. A space this size won't cost much. Come in and see us about it.

Purchasers who appreciate merit rather than price, and know that it is economy to buy the best, should carefully consider the Hoosier Hoe Broadcast Seeder. "Time is the test of merit" and the reputation and career of this machine extends back over years of useful service. It's a Hoosier and we are proud of it. That tells the story. Made in all sizes. Spring hoes or friction break hoes supplied as desired. Insist upon having the Hoosier. Grass Seed Attachments can be supplied when ordered. Everything in the Farm Machinery Line—Buggies and Wagons.

WHERE INCAS WORSHIPPED

By
MABEL LOOMIS TODD

TEMPLE OF THE SUN AT PACACAMAC

SIX CENTURIES before the benevolent if autocratic sway of the Incas, in the days of prehistoric Peru, Pachacamac, terra incognita of the world, "who who animates the universe," "world adjuster," was worshipped by primitive Indians. And despite the magnificent temple of Pachacamac, the most colossal and enigmatically situated near Tarma, 15,000 feet above sea level, and the splendor of Coricancha's golden courts at Cuzco, the Pachacamac temple by the sea was regarded as more awe inspiring than either of the others. To its oracles all pilgrims flocked. But during the period immediately before the Spanish conquest these three rivaled one another in richness and sanctity.

Little is left of the old glories today. Walls rise, still showing bits of mural paintings, preserved in the hot and dry desert air. Indications of terraces remain, of courts and avenues, a labyrinth of city streets; and thousands of skulls which the surrounding sands, gruesome reminders of the multitude who formerly lived and worshipped at these ruined shrines.

Peru has few merely tourist visitors, and of these fewer still see Pachacamac, the trip from Lima being considered long and hard. But for one accustomed to the saddle (and little of South America can be otherwise seen) Pachacamac is comfortably accessible.

The simplest route is by the excellent electric cars to the pretty suburb Chorrillos, beyond Miraflores, where horses should have been ordered in advance to await the traveler.

Over roadside walls of mud or adobe brick wild nasturtiums clamber in a riot of color; bare, high hills rise at one side; the battlements of San Juan, famous in the Chilean war, and here and there populous haciendas are passed before the open country is reached. A mile or two of lunging like swamps follows, rich in interest for lovers of birds and growing things. But beyond this fertile tangle one may wander along the hard sand beach for nearly all the remaining miles. Sea birds in such myriads that the sun is actually darkened as they fly up at our approach, seven or eight lines of superb Pacific rollers breaking in thunderous surf, a rampart of high sand mountains just back of the beach—and in two or three hours appear the familiar walls and sun-colored remains of Inca occupation.

For Pachacamac has been the scene of several superimposed civilizations, whereby its study is rendered more confusing than that of other ancient shrines. The many graves and their contents were seemingly at variance—chronologically inconsistent—with fragments of pottery and implements found near by. But it is certain that pre-Inca Indians had here their chief temple, and that when these all-conquering nobles with their herds of willing workers arrived triumphantly upon the scene, so far from trying to wipe out the old faith they treated it with much respect, perhaps from prudential motives, building their great temple to the sun on the hill above, but still permitting, even encouraging, continued worship of the creator god, Pachacamac, so that the temple's religious prestige did not suffer under the Incas.

The sun temple seems to have been built to include this earlier sanctuary, which shows an amicable relationship between the older cult and that worship of the sun which the Incas ultimately imposed on conquered tribes.

A beautiful site for these early dwellers chose for their rites. Although desert bounded on north and east, the temple themselves set in sand by whose encroaching drifts they are now half covered, toward the west calls the blue Pacific, and seaward lies the green and fertile Valley of Lurin, watered by its river of the same name, off whose mouth rise rugged islands, the wings of myriad sea birds flashing in the sunshine as they dip and circle and soar about the lofty cliffs.

Only 2½ miles wide at the coast, the little Lurin valley narrows rapidly toward the interior. A mile and a half distant lies the village, on the same side of the river as the ruins. Only 500 inhabitants now belong here, but perhaps 2,000 can be counted in the whole parish. Modern Pachacamac holds about 300, its parish 2,000. Treasuries of many kinds abound—the willow (Salix) always prominent, with cane (cañal) and trees bearing the chirimoya, palta, lucuma and other at a later epoch, the Inca might do at Cuzco. At the center of the north-west front the holiest shrine was placed. We can only imagine the shape and size of the large hall in ruins, but still showing that they were 11 feet high. The old "Inca" probably stood here to receive the envoys of chiefs, after they had waited on probation for an entire year to come into his presence. Outside the shrine was required before entering the first court, and of a twelvemonth for the upper court. As little mementoes made of it a mere complete ruin, even than others in Peru. Smaller than the later sun temple of the Incas, it was also, quite certainly, incrustated many times, if not several times, by the Inca Huiyana Chapi.

RUINS OF INCA SHRINES AT PACACAMAC

Of the ancient city at least one-quarter was occupied by the temple district and the remainder was divided by cross streets, 13 and 16 feet wide, with courts and buildings of palatial proportions, all completely. On the northwest these barriers were from 11 to 13 feet high and in general 8 feet broad, although this was in places increased to 16. Vast crowds must have filled the city at many times, for the wide adobe boulevards and walls, which were used constantly by pedestrians, are worn perfectly smooth on certain thoroughfares by the constant passing of multitudes.

Outside the city walls is widespread desert, one will (distant only half a mile), not less than 20 feet wide and 4½ yards long, still carrying around the desecrated ridges it once protected. Of all this great ruined area the sun temple itself is most conspicuous, rising 300 feet above the general level, on a series of terraces, south on the northeast and northwest, five on the south-east.

The modern history of this most interesting region begins with the journey of Hernando Pizarro, ordered by his more famous brother in 1533 to capture the temple treasures of Pachacamac. Pizarro had heard of its splendors at Cajamarca, when the Inca Atahualpa had told him that "an chief sanctuary of a whole people, and held in highest reverence by himself and his father, Huana Capac; and that it contained vast treasure in gold and silver offerings." But Hernando Pizarro traveled only about 10 miles a day, taking 22 days to cover the 340 miles; whereas the swift Indian runners bore messages of warning in far less time. One old Indian once ran from La Paz to Tarma, 190 miles, in three days, and much of the golden treasure was removed or concealed before his arrival. Enough remained, however, for colonial riches.

His conquest was complete on reaching the sanctuary. He at once demolished the shrine of the temple of Pachacamac, and its most sacred idol, in presence of the whole people assembled, raising a cross upon the debris. Thus began the decline of what was once so splendid and so vital a part of the earth.

After taking Cuzco Francisco Pizarro came in 1534 to Pachacamac, holding wild orgies in the sacred courts and still further horrifying a people already crushed and outraged.

The final struggle came, however, and the depopulation of the entire valley began, in the wars of Manco Inca, who in 1535 gathered all the Indians in a futile last struggle with Spain. After that the sands blew in and over the old faith, actually and metaphorically; Franciscans, Augustinians, Jesuits came successively to the valley, and its distinctive history was past.

But the keenness of archaeological vision has made the old days live again, has vitalized the ancient faith and brought before modern eyes the actual daily life and worship of these prehistoric tribes, whose whitened skulls still cluster about their ordered shrines.

At a later epoch, the Inca might do at Cuzco. At the center of the north-west front the holiest shrine was placed. We can only imagine the shape and size of the large hall in ruins, but still showing that they were 11 feet high. The old "Inca" probably stood here to receive the envoys of chiefs, after they had waited on probation for an entire year to come into his presence. "Yes, yes, so on."
"There were two things to do—hurry by or swallow."
"Bill talked to her for five minutes."

All Snakes Are Killers.
But all snakes, great and small, are killers. All of them eat creatures which they slay. None eat vegetable food of any kind. Now will they eat animals which they find dead. That is one reason, no doubt, why they have always been shunned and dreaded by human beings.

"Well?" replied the friend who makes painful efforts to cheer up. "It's all right so long as your landlord doesn't say so."

Where Surgery Falls Short.
"Surgery," said Simon York, at a dinner in New York, "accomplishes wonders nowadays. Hearts are sewed up; the appendix is removed; the large intestine is done away with."
