SENIORITY STOPS RAILROAD PEACE

White House Plan to Reinstate Workers Declared Impossible.

New York—Railway executives of the nation study but countervail the program advanced by the federal administration for settlement of the strike.

Waiting to accept conditionally two suggestions put forward by Hardings—that both sides abide by wage rates set by the railroad labor board and that law suits against the strike be withdrawn—the heads of 11 roads declared emphatically that it was impossible to reinstate strikers under the seniority rights, the third provision in the President's plan.

President Harding closed his letter with these two sentences:

"I need hardly add that I have reason to believe these terms will be accepted by the workers. If there is failure to do so, the administration accepts, they will be obliged to open direct negotiations or assume full responsibility for the situation."

CHICAGO WALKS TO WORK

Thousands Use Emergency Transport in Getting to Daily Tasks.

Chicago—Twenty thousand motor men, commanding cars on surface and elevated are on strike, and the greater part of the working portion of Chicago's nearly three million persons was forced to seek improvised transportation.

As usual all rolling stock available, including every variety of wheeled pullbus, pushbus or motorized vehicle, has been placed at the disposal of the traffic controllers, who did not enough to avoid tangible loss of time, once the honking, shouting horse of motor car drivers began posing their steady streams of workers into the business center.

LEWIS ASKS FOR CONFERENCE

Books Basic Agreement With Operators in Control Field.

Philadelphia—A joint wage conference of operators and sellers of the electric and illumination fields is to be held in Cleveland on Aug. 7 for the purpose of negotiating a basic agreement designed to terminate the present one, but has been adjourned for Aug. 14, the international president of the United Miners' Union.

The following telegram was sent to the operating interests in the central competitive field:

"Book basic agreement in behalf of the United Miners' Workers I and miners with the rail operators of the central competitive field to meet in Cleveland on Aug. 7, 1922, for the purpose of negotiating a basic agreement designed to terminate the present one, but has been adjourned for Aug. 14, the international president of the United Miners' Union."

The following telegram was sent to the operating interests in the central competitive field:

"Book basic agreement in behalf of the United Miners' Workers I and miners with the rail operators of the central competitive field to meet in Cleveland on Aug. 7, 1922, for the purpose of negotiating a basic agreement designed to terminate the present one, but has been adjourned for Aug. 14, the international president of the United Miners' Union."

HARDING PLAN IS SUBMITTED

Future Disposition of U. S. Labor Board Must Be Cleared by Letter.

New York—The conference of ratifying presidents assembled at the first session of the national convention of the nationwide strike settlement without taking action after Secretary of Commerce Hoover had presented his proposed resolution.

President Harding's plan was adopted.

The first vote took place, the men and women voting early this week, and the result was that the plan was adopted by the United States Rail Labor Board.

The second proposal provided that each union elect its own representative to the strike committee, which should be responsible for the welfare of the workers. It was decided by the Patachuk case.

The third proposal, the one retained, provided that the strike committee, which the conference voted to be a committee of conciliation, should be given power to make a settlement of the strike.

After the meeting, the strike committee, which the conference voted to be a committee of conciliation, suggested that strikers be taken back on the basis of seniority, which they refused before they walked out.

Crooks Is Named.

Chicago—Executive of the six railroads that have agreed to contribute to finance President Harding's plan to settle the strike, and members of the official American delegation to the Brazilian national exposition.

Pertinent Pointers for Practical Farmers

Prepared by the Agricultural Department, University of Minnesota

FARMERS URGED TO SELECT SEED CORN FROM OWN FIELDSExperiment Station and Extension Division Men Suggest Sept. 10-20 Set Aside for Seed Corn Time.

In accordance with past practices, extension stations and experiment stations have suggested that farmers set and recommend that Sept. 14-20 be set aside for Seed Corn Time in Minnesota.

Farmers are urged to select their seed corn from their own fields or arrange for a supply from neighbors who have good fields. When seed is selected from the field, it is important to save the best ears and to use them as the maximum extra.

Seed Corn Time has been a big factor in increasing corn production in Minnesota. It has helped to extend the corn growing season by preserving the seeds best fitted for which adapted districts in the state.

This is the time of year to begin preparing for next season's crop. The most important work is the formation of seed corn before killing frost. Then, when it is properly dried and laid away in well ventilated storage, there should be no trouble in getting the best quality of seed corn for good corn for increased corn yields in 1923.

WARM HOUSES NECESSARY

But Few Fall Pigs Raised in the State of Minnesota.

Are fall pigs less profitable in Minnesota than their spring born brethren? Many Minnesota farmers will tell you "Yes." But Dr. W. P. Ferrin and M. A. McCarty, of the division of animal husbandry at University Farm have a say about it upon the close of a feeding experiment of two years duration to test the correctness of that impression.

"Very few fall pigs are raised in the state of Minnesota, a general impression prevails in some quarters that growing them is unprofitable. It is true that unless given good care, fall pigs and become unprofitable and loss making. But from our experiments in winter than in summer and finished hogs are higher price when fall pigs are marketed than when the spring pigs are sold."

Facts covering the rate of gain, amount of feed to make one hundred pounds of gain, the costs of gains, raising feed costs and market prices on the basis of the five year pre-war period of 1910-1914, lead to the following conclusions, according to Ferrin and McCarty:

GREAT DIFFERENCE IN PEAS

Experiments on 240 Lots at State U. Prove Divergence.

Those covering the rate of gain, amount of feed to make one hundred pounds of gain on eighty lots of peas, and a study in the college of agriculture of the University of Minnesota, who is taking a stand on 240 lots of garden peas which are a part of the experiment station's field and research work at the University, head of the vegetable garden section of the division of horticulture, Mr. Bureau has been selecting and crossing varieties of peas for several years in an attempt to develop a game pea, the big podded, big seeded and sweet or wrinkled type. In the garden pea field, he has found that the variety tests are made by using pea peas from England, Scotland, France, Germany, Cape Colony, Holland and various localities in the United States. Stating that the pods will break down, the rows, among these various varieties, he recognizes many of them by their individualities and knows them by their first and last names. Some day he hopes to find a pea which he has been striving for; his head among the rest as a reward for his trouble.

HARVEST PIGS

Minnesota agricultural college and county agents out over the state and the correction of the sow's ration so she will not eat too much during the gestation period will prevent falls losses in pigs, a trouble that disappears year after year in various canning districts where the sows become acclimated to the diet. Acute cases of swine erysipelas pigs are an endocrine gland. This gland is located in the neck and is very important to normal development. It has been proven that the removal of the hairless skin and testicles in their iodine content, and that proper feeding of the sow will prevent the trouble.

Of all farm machinery, windmills come close to needing the most oil, and they get the least.

Cattle were the first money. The Roman word for money, pecunia, is derived from the pecus, meaning cattle—well's Outline of History.

Cutting seven years off the ten year sentence of William H. Schaefer, bank wrecker, has properly aroused the indignation of many men and hundreds of people to cut their savings into fourteen state banks, and then robbed them. He committed a series of crimes for any one of which ten years imprisonment would be a moderate punishment.

The responsibility for releasing Schaefer is entirely on the state Board of Parole, which has issued its directions under the terms on which he was granted parole. When he was an model prisoner or the state of his health. His was a case of which to make an example of punishment, not merely grace, leniency, but "gracious leniency," a term applied by W. J. Bryan to the similar case of Barker Charles W. Morse.

Release of such as Schaefer and Morse, after a frank trial, in their terms has been seen as an injury to the public in many ways than one. It efficacy of punishment as a deterrent of crime, and it also gives material to those who denounce the law and the overzealousness of the big thieves. It handicaps the application of justice to all thieves, big and little.

The parole system has been gradually developed. It was intended for the benefit of the "first offender," for the fellow who had yielded to temptation once, under the stress of hard circumstances or as a result of bad influences, and for whom the parole would not repeat criminality if given a helping hand. Schaefer was not ignorant of the nature of his act nor the desire of others, more qualified for mercy for such a criminal.

Such are the consequences of a parole system that works secretly, without taking the public into its confidence, and that regard to the consequences of its actions on the public morale and with an assumed conscience, on information there is no outsider, but as punishment. It seems to be that if that place were used it is for state officials to deplore failure to respect the law when the law is applied in such a way as to promote disregard for it.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

The girl of 20 years ago was taught to cultivate a strict reserve. She was warned against looking at men she met on the streets. A woman was speaking the other day of how strictly she was taught that respectability, that keeping her eyes straight ahead became a fixed habit. Later she married a minister and was supposed to become a social leader in her parish. The habitual reserve was still fixed on her that her parishioners complained that she would not look them on the street.

Very few modern flappers have had much training at that. Their pert heads are ever revolving on their leathery necks, and if there is boy within eyeshot they know.

Unlike their mothers of 20 years ago, they are not afraid of being called forthrighting. They shout to their boy friends, take hold of their button hole and pull him into the room. If a family automobile is frequently engaged for "putting parties" and if Father or Mother remonstrates, the reply is "they all do it."

Just how much harm is in all this one can hardly say. Some people feel that as a result immorality is on the increase among high school young people, while others deny it.

Among the young people there has been a keener sense of danger than her mother had at her age. Her mother 25 years ago had an innocent, trusting, the good old fashioned mannerism man.

The daughter sees the seedy side of life at the movie shows, and has at least learned that smiling exteriors conceal many dark hidden things.

Boys and girls now feel that this easy familiarity between the sexes is a commanding habit and tends to take the bloom and charm away from the girl. What parents and teachers do not tell them that it is necessarily wrong. They show them that the things that are common and cheap are liable to destroy body and soul if life is devoted to them and viewed with contempt by most. The flapper has to hold herself somewhat in reserve to make her self attractive.

Services for Sunday August 6th. The Rev. John E. Bowes, Pastor of the First Methodist Church in the city of St. Paul will preside both morning and evening at the usual hours.

Dr. Bowes is a very live and wide awake man, who is interested in attending the attention of the church at large throughout the world. Scarcely a Sunday goes by that some one from distant quarters of the country, Canada and other lands do not visit the church and take note of the work done there. This will afford an opportunity to the people of Pine City and vicinity to hear some of the foremost preachers of the world.

Those who like to hear a worthwhile address will not want to miss this opportunity. Be sure to plan to attend.

The youngster born with a golden spoon in his mouth will have nothing on the Minnesota boy and girl visitors to the State Fair, September 2-9, who are fortunate—or was—enough to possess a perfect set of teeth.

More than $500 in gold cash prizes will be given. Minnesota children from the ages of 2 to 10 inclusive for clean healthy mouths, and these prizes will be awarded by Governor. Prese himself on the last day of the fair, September 9, Thomas C. Clark, Secretary of the Fair, announced.

A grand sweepstakes prize of $500 will be awarded to the child with the best set of teeth, and the boy and girl holding the most championship in the rural and city groups respectively will each receive a sweepstakes of $25. The other prizes will be awarded according to age groups—two to six, six to 12,

Only Two Months Gasoline Supply Actually Stored

MUCH has been said during the past few weeks respecting the vast amount of gasoline in storage, and many have drawn conclusions from these statements which are not justified by the facts.

It is true that there is a fairly large storage on hand but when this storage is set against the consumption its relative size diminishes rapidly.

Between January 1 and June 1 the storage of gasoline was increased about 270,000,000 gallons, while the monthly consumption increased but 224,000,000 gallons; but during June the consumption was largely increased while the storage remained stationary.

During the past six weeks storage has decreased, as was to be expected, and this decrease will continue until late in the fall. Here are the most recent statistics taken from the reports of the U. S. Bureau of Mines:

Gasoline Stocks, Jan. 1922	586,087,132 gals.
Gasoline Consumption, Jan. 1922	274,844,968 "
Gasoline Stocks, Mar. 1922	585,607,102 "
Gasoline Consumption, May, 1922	495,242,431 "

The June consumption figures compiled by the Bureau of Mines are not yet available but we know from our own records that consumption is making heavy inroads into stocks.

Even at the present rate of consumption there is not to exceed 60 days supply in storage, which for this time of the year is abnormally low. Reports from refining areas indicate that refineries all over the country are being run to capacity, and we do not anticipate a gasoline shortage though predictions to that effect are being made.

It has always been the practice of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) to operate its refineries as near capacity as possible during the months of low consumption in order that it might have on hand adequate supplies during periods of great consumption.

Only a large and efficiently organized company can provide facilities which insure service regardless of demand. It is because the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) always works months in advance, that it can promise at all times a steady, constant, dependable service.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—Clay Lindsay, Mendoza through Arizona, a party of westerners gather at a ranch and a male companion, stop to witness a fight and a woman, who is the wife of one of the men, is shot. A moment later, the woman's husband, one of the cowboys saves her life.

CHAPTER II.—On the train Lindsay becomes interested in a young woman, Kitti Munson, who is a dancer. She becomes a motion-picture actress. She is married to a man, Jerry Durand, who is a gambler. Persecuting his intentions, Lindsay proves her innocence.

CHAPTER III.—On his first day in New York, Lindsay is offered a job as a janitor. That individual and the range-hunting, gamblers and women test a few hydrants before he goes to see a movie. Lindsay invites Clay into her house and helps him.

CHAPTER IV.—Clay's "rescuer" introduces him to a woman, Miss Kitten, who says meet her father, Col. Whitford, and is invited to visit them again. He meets Miss Kitten and is disappointed in her, so he returns to his stage aspirations, and is surprised to find that he has been cast in a "saloon" Clay visits her there.

Colonel Whitford was of the West himself. He had lived a rugged, hard life for years before he made his lucky strike in the Bird Cage. He and moved from Colorado to New York only ten years before. The sound of Clay's driving voice "like a man in spite of himself." This man was too good to be true. It wasn't possible that anybody could come to the big city and imposed himself on such a gaudy, rowdy town of the outside world. It was not possible, but it had happened just the same. Long before the cow puncher had finished his story of hogtrotting the Snake to a hitching post, the Indian host, the traveling man was seated of the largest tables in Clay Lindsay's admirers. He was ready to hide him from all the police in New York.

Whitford told Stevens to bring in the fifty-dollar comic so that he could count over it. He let go of a whoop of delight at sight of its stiff sudden appearance. He examined its sickly blue with a look of mirth.

"Assuredly you'll fade or shrivel," murmured Clay wistfully.

He managed to get the coat on with difficulty. The sleeves reached just below the elbows.

"You look like a filly from Sing Sing," pronounced Whitford, "young, gay, and full of fun. I have a chance on earth to fool the police."

"The color did run and fade some," admitted Clay.

"Worth every cent of those ninety dollars," said Whitford. "The Swedes got home with it—and he left you it at a sacrifice for fifty-five dollars!" The millionaire wept happy tears as a climax of his rapture. He swallowed his cigar smoke and had to be pounced on the back by his daughter.

Jenkins came to the door and announced "Mr. Bronfied."

Almost on his heels a young man in uniform, a plain-looking man entered the room. He had the assured ease of one who has the run of the house. Miss Whitford introduced the two young men and Whitford looked the way Jenkins was looking. In sooth say he was in his element.

Clay recognized him immediately. He had shaken hands once before with that well-satisfied young man, and on that occasion a fifty-dollar bill had passed from one to the other. The New Yorker evidently did not know him.

It became apparent at once that Whitford had called to bring in the man he had met in that young woman came up to say good-by to her new acquaintance.

"Will you be here when I get back?"

"If our friends outside give me a chance for a little rest, I'll be there."

Her brilliant smile eyes looked into his eyes. "You'll come again and let us know how you escaped," she invited.

"I certainly do that, Miss Whitford."

"Then we'll look for you Thursday afternoon, say."

"I'll be here."

"If the police don't get you."

"They won't," he promised seriously.

"I'll be here," he suggested.

Bronfied in a forced voice.

She nodded causally and walked out of the room like a young Diana, straight as a dart in her trim slender-decent upon New York, but her mind had not yet dulled the wonder of it.

He had become a fast friend of Clay Whitford. Together they had tramped through Central Park and motored in the Hudson in one of her father's cars. The young couple had often talked along with the young colonel, but had known the surprise and delight of discoveries, or finding in the other a quality of freshness and candor.

They had sat down and smoked like a boat in harbor, pausing here and there on the curb to take on a passenger. While it was getting under way after one such stop, another driver had run into the rear of their car.

Clay came to a sudden silent arrest. His eyes focused on a girl sitting on a back seat. In the pretty childish face he read a wistful hopefulness, a desire for sympathy. Presently, during an intermission of the music, he rose and took the rest of those present into his confidence.

"Boupois to the core," he announced, "I am now, and a companion, stop to witness a fight and a woman, who is the wife of one of the men, is shot. A moment later, the woman's husband, one of the cowboys saves her life."

"Glad to meet you again, Miss Kitti."

she said cheerfully. "How the big town does you good."

The girl looked at him with a gain of surprise. "Mr. Lindsay?" Suddenly tears filled her eyes. She forgot that she had left him with the promise never again to speak to him. She was from a country, which was another world, and he was a friend from home.

Clay leaned forward on a search for information. "Excuse me for troubling you, but I am a stranger. But isn't it a remarkable number of American women and children?"

The pert-faced man looked at him with thinly veiled contempt. "You wouldn't be here if I explained."

"When I wouldn't, but you take a word at it and I'll tell you high wide, and handsome."

"I'd ought to have you pulled. Three years I've been on this run and—"

"Nice run. Wages good?"

"I'm not a good, young fellow. I can tell you nothing. You're going to pay another fare?"

Clay paid it.

The conductor retired to his post. "What about that movie job? Is it an 'open' or pay gold?" Lindsay asked Kitti.

By hit her story came out. It was a common enough one. She had been flummoxed out of her money by the engaged school of moving picture actors, and the sharpies had decamped with it.

As she looked at her recovered friend, Kitti grimly realized an outburst of rage had taken place in his appearance. He was dressed gaudily in clothes of perfect fit made for him by Col. Whitford's tailor. From about to bat he was a New Yorker turned up regardless of expense. But the warm smile, the strong tanned face, the grip of the big hand that bunched the hair, the small thrill of the boyishness in his eyes, were still there.

Kitti started back with a little cry of distress.

The freedom taken by the neophyte was almost reminiscent of the savagery of Arizona. He took the post's advice and followed his Lawless Impulse where it led. Across the room, Jerry arms reached. Slim fingers closed around the moist neck of the fat-faced man, and dragged him forward, leaving overturned glasses in the wake of his kiss.

"I've got a job at last," she explained to him. "Working downtown in Greenwich Village, selling cigarettes. Sizing the Climax. At least that's what they call me. I carry a tray of them evenings into the cafe."

"Greenwich Village?" asked Clay.

Kitti was not able to explain that the village is a state of mind which is the habitat of long-haired men and is the freedom of the coat he had stepped into.
