VOTE AS YOU PLEASE BUT BE SURE AND VOTE

One week from next Tuesday is the election day, when citizens have the opportunity to go to the polls and express their individual preferences for the candidates for the various public offices. Not only is it your right to vote, but it is your duty as well.

And every voter has the right to voice his convictions and every voter has the right to his or her opinion. This is supposed to be a free country. If you are a Farmer-Laborite, that is your privilege. If you are a Republican, that is your privilege, or if some one else is a Democrat, that is his privilege. But if you are a Farmer-Laborite, that doesn't mean that you are a socialist or a radical. Nor are we going to insist that if someone has one view, he must accept it if you belong to a different political party than we do each may try to convince the other, that his party is the best one. But in trying to convince each other, it is not necessary to throw mud or call each other names.

When an editorial appears in the Pine City Poker advocating the election of any one candidate, it is but the expression of the publisher's opinion. The Pine City Poker. The policy of "the poker" is not one of abuse or mud slinging and never will be. If you don't agree with us politically, that is your privilege. We are not going to insist that just as we want you to exert your right to our own opinion.

Many of Pine County's best citizens will vote the Third Party ticket and every voter has the right to vote any ticket which he wishes, being honest in doing so. The man who will be elected governor will be governor because there were voters who wanted him to be the chief executive, more than those who voted for the other candidates.

The vital question on election day is not "who will you vote for" but "have you voted your honest conviction?"

THEODORE CHRISTIASON

Theodore Christiason, Republican candidate for governor, was born on a farm in Lino City, Pine County, Minnesota, forty-one years ago. He was raised on a farm and worked his way through college, getting a scholarship from the state and a loan from the department of law. He has lived in Dawson many years where he published and edits the Dawson Sentinel. He has been a member of the state legislature representing the past five sessions and for the past two sessions has been chairman of the committee on appropriation of the house. There is no question as to Mr. Christiason's ability and no question but what he is qualified to be Minnesota's chief executive.

GODFREY G. GOODWIN

Anyone who has heard Godfrey

Goodwin of Cambridge, candidate for congress of this district, can't help but admit he is sincere and will conscientiously represent the people of this district. No greater tribute can be paid to Mr. Goodwin than the fact that he has been county attorney of Pine County for twenty consecutive years. The fact that he is functioning, his record that the citizens have found in him an able efficient public officer worthy of their confidence and support. What more can the voters of the tenth district ask for a congressman?

MICHAEL B. HURLEY

Our country should be free from politics. It is for this reason that Federal judges are appointed for life. It just is as important that our district court should be free from politics as it is that the president be a non-politician for the conduct of his profession as a lawyer. He has the qualifications to sit in the capacity of judge of lower district courts. That is the only thing that should enter into the gubernatorial campaign. Mr. Hurley has the qualifications and he is entitled to our support for he is a home product.

Theatre Notes

THURSDAY & FRIDAY

Babara La Marr and Lew Cody in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." "The Hills" will be on and two guns will be drawn on a woman screamed and the lights went on, and—"It's the heartstirring thrill in Metro's motion picture of "Robert W. Service's famous poem, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." "Alas! Our Gang in "Tire Trouble." "Prices 10 & 25c.

SATURDAY—

All star Cast "The Pride of Flanders." Where fiery Spanish passion, Spanish ideals of honor still cling to the American West—that's the setting of Peter B. Kyne's greatest story. A virile romance gay with color and bold with adventure, throwing a bold light upon America's most colorful period. Directed by the man who made "Humoresque."

Larry Seaman in "The Bell Hop." Prize Night.

SUNDAY & MONDAY—

Irene Rich in "Behold This Woman." An adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's famous novel "The Hillman."

The story of a motion picture star whose motor breaks down and she is forced to accept the hospitality of a wealthy gentleman who happens to be a woman hater. The action is laid on the ranch and the suspense where many picturesque and spectacular backgrounds have been arranged for the main action of this stirring story. A novel love tandem is interwoven in the plot and the surprise ending.

Also a Mack Sennett Comedy "Sky Barking."

TUESDAY—

William Desmond in "The Breathless Moment." Said the "Dlick," "Where'd you get the 'Dlick'?"

operations. A third for removal of her tonsils will be performed for her she was home.

Mr. and Mrs. Swenson of North Branch were back and visitors at the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Wandel sr. Dr. Swenson is much improved in health following they didn't. It is a well known fact in these parts that Bill is a physical culture fiend, but Bill says, there is a place for all things. These two hundred were packed in the sky line to the north, and Nelson was supposed to have his eyes glued to the southern horizon, but he didn't. The Southern evidence got him off with a few words and chucks and decided he could exercise a little, and perchance show his fellow hunter just how a real calliope hunter would perform. At any rate he was going through the main course, armfuls of mallards were being head on crack, crack, over his head and on looking up saw some Mallards overhead that had sneaked up while the good senator was performing his solo. The reporter can't say what Bill said to the noble character about the senator's watchful waiting, but we imagine there were a number of derogatory remarks as to the senator's hunting ability and the opinion that when these two worthy gentlemen go hunting in the future, Bill will put Nelson through a course of physical torture before he gets him off with a few words and a perfectly willing to sit and quietly watch for ducks the balance of the day.

CHAPTER XXVI—Continued.

Jack and Solomon exercised unusual care in guarding the camp and organizing for defense in case of attack. It was soon after Washington's departure that Arnold went away on the trail to the south, Solomon following, keeping out of his field of vision. The general returned two days later. Solomon came into Jack's but about midnight of the day of Arnold's return with unspoken news.

Jack was at his desk sketching a map of the Highlands. The camp was at rest. The candle in Jack's desk was the only sign of life. He had been to the south, Solomon having put out his horse, came to talk with his young friend. He stepped close to the desk, swallowed nervously and began his whispered report.

"The British are goin' on," he began. "A British ship were 'binn' nigh the mouth of the Croton river. Arnold went aboard. An' I guess got into his boat and took him the path down the Hudson west over and went into the bush. Stayed there till mornin' night. If 'twere honest business, why did they go off in the bush alone for a talk?

Jack shook his head.

"Seen as I seen that I went to one o' our batteries an' tol' the cap'n what were on my mind."

"—In a British tub. We'll make 'em back a little," see he. "She's too cuss anyhow."

"Then he let go a shot that ripped the water front o' her bow. Say, Jack, they were some bonyards around the Hudson. They blazed her sailin' an' she fell away down the river a mile or so. The sun was set when Arnold got into the Hudson, still a mile from the British. He stepped close to the deck, swallowed nervously and began his whisper report.

"I guess they're goin' to take the Britisher over to the house of that Tory, Reuben Smith. I got that fust an' kin in the bushes. I heard them both. An' gold an' f' other things come along an' went into the house. Twere so dark I couldn't see 'em but I knowed they was there."

"How's the young man askin'?"

"Cause they didn't light no candles. They sit in the dark an' they didn't talk, but loud like honest men would. I could hear them more."

Jack. "Now go and get some rest. Tomorrow's a hard day."

Jack spent a bad night in the effort to be as great as his problem. In the morning he and his two sons and three other able scouts to look the ground over east, west and south of the army. One of them was to take the road to Marcellus and deliver a message to Washington.

After the noon mess, Arnold mounted his horse and rode away alone. The young brigadier had for his trusted friend Captain Merrivether. Captain Merrivether got on his horse on the east road alone," said Jack. "He is not well. There's something wrong with his heart. I am a little worried, but I do not like to be traveling alone. My horse is from front of the door. Jump on his back and keep in sight of the general, but don't let him know that you are doing."

A young Miss Margaret had come to the office of the new brigadier in a most cheerful mood.

"I have good news for you," she announced. "A British ship has come in a wild manner, full of treachery and with General Arnold. I sent a letter to Margaret Haze on my own responsibility with the general's official communication. I advised her to come to me at once and promised her safe conduct to her home. I expect her. For the rest we wait you. Let us have a wedding at headquarters. On the night of the twenty-eighth General Washington and Arnold returned. He agreed to dinner with us that evening."

"I think that she must have observed the change in my face for while she spoke, a great fear had come upon me," he confessed in the court of inquiry. "It seemed clear to me that if there was a plot, the capture of Washington must be a part of it and my sweetest a helpful accessory."

"You know, ma'am, that I am eager to meet you. I send my respects, but do not tell me that he is to meet the British. May I know all the good news?"

"Of course, we will tell you about that," she assured me. "We had only a little. It is some negotiation regarding an exchange of prisoners. We are more interested in Margaret and the general. You would tell me about her. I have heard that she has become very good indeed."

"I showed Mrs. Arnold the notorious portrait which Margaret had given me the day of our little ride and talk in London and then an orderly ride back. She and I then gave me an excuse to put myself to the untimely bidding the widow I had no heart. The message was from Boston. Arnold had word that the British were hardy and would be to hold the river and was two miles above Stony Point with a white flag at his masthead."

"I went out of doors. Soon I met Merrivether coming into camp. Arnold had returned. He had ridden at a walk toward the headquarters of the general's original and turned about and come back without a word or noise. Arnold was looking down as if absorbed in deep thought when Merrivether passed him in the road.

He did not return the latter's salute, it was evident that the general had ridden away for the sole purpose of being alone.

"I went back to my hut and sat down to my pipe in my way when suddenly the general appeared at my door on a plain mare and asked me to take a little ride with him. I mounted my horse and we rode on the east road toward the half a mile or so.

"I believe that my wife had some talk with you this morning," he began.

"Yes," I answered.

"A British officer has come up the river in a sloop under a white flag with a prisoner, regarding an exchange of prisoners. In my answer to their request for a conference, I told Mrs. Arnold and Miss Margaret Hale invited her to come to the house where she would find a hearty welcome and her love—now an able and most valiant officer of the British army, a friend of mine. Mrs. Hale agreed that Miss Haze would be of great service to the party. We are to do you this little favor?

"I thanked him. "I wish that you could go with me when I never to meet her in the morning," he said. "In my absence you will, of course, be necessary for us to be on duty. Mrs. Arnold will go with me and we shall, I hope, bring her back."

"We are preoccupied. His face wore a serious look.

"I was a melancholy note in his tone—I had confidence of his chief for a few days and, before the leaves had fallen, the war would end. The American army being so small, it would be at the mercy of Sir Henry Clinton."

Andre would have reached New York that night if The Vulture had not changed her position on account of a gale and lay over before Stony Point. For that, credit must be given to the good agent Solomon Binkus. The ship was not in sight when the two men came out in their boat. The west side of the river while the night was falling, Andre had heard the shot and now that the ship had left he feared that his command was suspected.

"I may want to get away in that boat," he suggested to Andre.

"She will not return until she gets orders from you or me," the Britisher assured him.

"I wonder what has become of her?" said Andre.

"She has probably dropped down the river for some reason," Andre answered. "What am I to do?"

"Take you to the house of a man who lives over the river and send you to New York by boat with passengers in the morning. You can reach the British lines tomorrow."

"I would like that," Andre exclaimed. "It will afford me a welcome change of scene."

"Smith will give you a suit of clothes that will fit you well enough," said the traitor. "You and he are about the same size. It will be better for you to be in civilian dress."

So it was that in the darkness of the September evening Smith and Andre, the latter riding the plumed horse, made their escape. King Ferry, where they were taken across the river. They rode a few miles south of the landing to the shore of Crom pond and spent the night with a friend of Smith. In the morning the latter went out and found that they had passed Pine's bridge on the Croton river. Then he turned back.

Now Andre fared along down the road alone on the back of the mare Nancy. He got her to the British camp and presented his pass. It was examined and endorsed and he went on his way. He met transports, wagons, a cavalry and other a company of militia coming up from western Connecticut but no one stopped him. In the faded hat and coat and trousers of Reuben Smith, this man, who called himself Major, was not noticed unlike the farmer folk who were riding hither and thither in the neutral territory, on their pettish errands. His face was different. It was the well-kept face of an English aristocrat with handsome dark eyes and hair beginning to turn gray.

A little out of Tarrytown on the highway the horseman traveled a group of men who were riding hither and thither, reckless, unlettered country lads waiting for cows to come down out of the wild land to be milked. They were "skinned" in the patriot militia, some have said, so that they were farm boys in the army. However that may have been, they were undoubtedly rough, half-clad fellows full of raw energy, bright, free and full of unrestrained warfare. They were looking for the British as for cattle. Tories were their richest prey, for the latter would give his horses to buy a passage across the ocean of danger.

They came upon Andre and challenged him. The latter knew that he had passed the American outposts without thinking that he was near the British lines.

He was not far from the British camp with the geography of the upper east shore. He knew that the so-called neutral territory was overrun by two parties. The British were called the "Tories" and the Yankees the "Drapers."

"What demands do you bring?" Andre demanded.

"The Lower," said one of the Yankees.

Rare Sea Shell

In a specially provided case in the foyer of the American Museum of Natural History there was exhibited recently for the first time one of the most highly prized cone shaped shells ever found in America.

According to the experts it is probably the "Glory of the Sea."

It is about five inches in length, of peculiar slender appearance, grace proportions and has a tapering spine. It suggests a stylized figure of a person.

The ground color is pale ivory, overlaid with a mosaic of thousands of triangular figures ranging from an eighth of an inch to almost a square foot.

These triangles are outlined in chrome yellow or deep chestnut brown.

Among the sports that have enjoyed a rapid growth in the United States is ice hockey.

Probably no one factor helped Manager Robinson's Dodgers in their semi-final rush for the National pennant more than has Jacques Fournier.

His hitting was hard and timely, and his fielding brilliant.

Here are the three catchers of the Washington Senators, whose steady play to right is Tate, Ruel and Hargrave, whose handling of the pitchers has won much comment and praise from players and fans alike.

Good Control Is Fixed

Habit of G. Alexander

Grover Cleveland Alexander, of the Chicago Nationals, started pitching at Gainesville, Fla., in 1903. He is thirty years old, but Alexander is probably the type that improves with age.

His masterful control was displayed during the training trip in Texas.

"I take you to the house of a man who lives over the river and to New York by boat with passengers in the morning. You can reach the British lines tomorrow."

"I would like that," Andre exclaimed. "It will afford me a welcome change of scene."

"Smith will give you a suit of clothes that will fit you well enough," said the traitor. "You and he are about the same size. It will be better for you to be in civilian dress."

So it was that in the darkness of the September evening Smith and Andre, the latter riding the plumed horse, made their escape. King Ferry, where they were taken across the river. They rode a few miles south of the landing to the shore of Crom pond and spent the night with a friend of Smith. In the morning the latter went out and found that they had passed Pine's bridge on the Croton river. Then he turned back.

Won't Sell Her Club

Mrs. J. C. Dunn, center of the Cleveland Indians, who in refutation of the report that she is going to sell the club, states she will not sell her baseball team until she has made the precedent of being the first woman to own a pennant-winning and world's-champion pinball machine.

Blue, now fourteen years old, somewhat wind-breaker but not lacking in the comfort of old age, is Epidur's mate.

Hawthorne's mother was White Thorn and Blue's mother also was Epidur.

Twelve years ago Hawthorne defeated the cream of two-year-olds and won the famous Bashford Manor stakes. Since then he has won the record book was pitching 51.23 consecutive innings without a base on balls—and then Tillie Walker walked. This record was made in 1923, when Blue was only one year younger than he is now.

Bill Tolley, once his battery mate, says Alexander's reputation as the "king of control" is due entirely to his wonderful condition at all times.

Helpful to Dodgers

Probably no one factor helped Manager Robinson's Dodgers in their semi-final dash for the National pennant more than has Jacques Fournier.

His hitting was hard and timely, and his fielding brilliant.
