Them Days Are Gone Forever !

Spring is the time of year when there is always a faint nostalgia lingering in the air. It clings around the schoolhouse, drifting down the corridors like a fine mist, coating everything with memories.

Soon the footsteps and familiar voices of the Seniors will be only fading echoes in the corridors. Not so long ago, these same boys and girls first entered the sacred portals of old Webster school.

It was Spring, nineteen hundred and thirty-two, and Spring Primary had begun. We trudged confidently up the steps that first day, our cherubic faces glowing with eagerness. Soon we were engulfed in the enormous task of Going To School.

One of the memories of first grade will always be of the dim, old cloakroom where the odor of stale lunches and wet mittens filled the air, and coats hung in gnome-like shapes from the low hooks. John Huber became the acknowledged wizard of arithmetic class because he could add two and two without counting on his fingers.

In second grade, Walt Silesky strolled from the play-ground battlefield with a black eye administered with that 'feminine touch' by Lois Striegl.

A unique unrehearsed performance on the slide was gracefully accomplished by Alf Stratte when we reached our third year in the grades. Alf dashed to the slide at recess, as was the custom, climbed the stairs, and took a shortcut to the ground by accidentally plunging over the side. Linnea Hamlin attempted to start a new fad. She cut off her eyebrows in art class, but Miss Woehrle did not give her approval to the fashion.

The Grade Chorus was the beginning of our musical career which started in fourth grade. That year the school picnic was at Striegl's farm, and after stuffing ourselves with peanut butter sandwiches, dill pickles, potato salad, pop, and ice cream, we spent a restful afternoon on the swings.

Miss Nelson, our fifth grade teacher, started a hopeless baseball contest—boys against girls—after two days the boys were in the lead, thirty-seven to seven.

Sixth grade was a thrilling year. Paul Mettling arrived from 'the West' in time for the two weeks extra Christmas vacation which resulted from the fact that 'the little red schoolhouse' was a heap of ashes. Donald St. Hilare thrilled us with his novel rendition of Kilmar's poem "Trees". Miss Fritz decided after hearing it, that Donald would never be an orator.

We spent the seventh grade bungling, tramping and gawking. Mr. Saunders, our science teacher, prophesied that when we were seniors, our basketball team would win the District Tournament. In the partitioned lunchroom, where we had our English and History classes, we had a difficult time distinguishing Miss O'Connor's voice from Mr. Harvey's.

Besides the usual eighth grade studies, we also learned the delicate art of writing five-hundred word themes, particularly on the subjects of 'Talking' or 'Chewing Gum'. Those were Miss Flaa's pet peeves, as everyone in Mathematics class soon discovered.

Two main attractions prevailed our freshman year. The boys were fascinated by the windows in Miss Furni's English class room, and could be seen dangling over the sills at any time, much to Miss Furni's horror. For the frosh 'femmes', the Petraborg boys provided the greatest interest.

Our sophomore year was a flurry of typing papers. For one frantic hour daily, we would peck away at our machines with feverish fingers. Bill Haugen's poor over-worked typewriter suffered a complete collapse one day, and for the rest of the year, was held together with electrician's tape. Dick Boo accidentally broke Catherine Davis' arm when a slight argument arose in Miss Frenz's homeroom.

Our float with its unusual slogan (see photo) won first prize in the Homecoming Parade our junior year. We all drank cider in "Sherwood Forest" at the Prom.

Mr. Saunders' prophesy came true when we were seniors. We not only won the District Basketball Tournament, but became district football champs as well. We presented "Brother Goose" as the senior class play, and danced at our last high school prom.

The boys have outgrown their knickers; the girls their braids; marble games in the spring mud are over for us. No more will we hang from the second-story windows waving at passing cars, nor will we gulp 'malted' at the drug store while discussing the latest trivia. Other Dragons will wear the Green and Gray; other voices will cheer them on. And we, Seniors of '45, will leave school as we entered; ready to face the future with eager eyes.
