Jaros, Pan-German and Former Mayor of Duisberg, Proposed as New Chancellor.

Berlin—Several prominent Berlin communists were arrested yesterday, including founder and chairman of a committee which came into the hands of the authorities that Moscow had called upon Berlin communists to undertake "bloody provocations."

The communists' protest in the Reichstag on Nov. 29 was deliberately started from Moscow, according to a statement issued by the socialist press service here. It publishes a letter dated Nov. 18, signed by the German communist emissary, who is in Berlin, severely reproving the German communists of the Russian communists for their inactive "spite our own workers and our comrades there so to conduct themselves in the next session of the Reichstag that they would be forcibly elected from the house."

The communists' protest, it adds, follows up this action with street demonstrations, etc., and concludes:

"The communists must be carried out."

The central executive demands that all obstacles shall be overcome.

The party must get out of its inertia."

Dr. Heinrich Albert, former mayor of Duisberg, has joined all the leading political candidates abandoned him and proposed a min'stry of their own, headed by Dr. Jaros, former mayor of Duisberg.

Coats and Wraps Pretty and Warm

An arctic winter is headed this way. The news is in the very air—indeed, because the weather has changed. The reason is not because a glorious season of rashes in furs has opened. Dress authorities say there has never been a time when all their experience when alone had such a vague and haphazard dominated the entire category of styles.

Always says a fashion writer in the New York Times, a woman who went in for good clothes has had a fur coat.

Jacquette for Debutantes Is Made of Scotch Mole Trimmed With Ermine.

In her winter layout, it was the one note of indulgence in her wardrobe; her pride, and the envy of her less fortunate friends, was her coat. She clung to the one of affluence; the coat was safe—the last word in luxury—for sable-like robes, has ever had high value.

The possessor of a sealskin coat was once regarded as a person of rank in the world of fashion. One fur wrap was thought, in days past, to be a sufficient blanket for one person, and no longer. The man who offered fur garments to his rich customers had often to employ all of his salesmanship to persuade them to buy fur instead of cloth for outer wraps.

The automobile changed all that, for motor coats became a necessity. Driving in the open, it was impossible to keep warm in anything but a fur, and the salesmen, unconsciously, an ally of the dealer in furs. Envoking wraps and ankle-length coats of the heavy furs were built into the model, and the wear was established. All of the customer varieties of fur were used for those first utility wraps—raccoon, opossum, coon, ringtail, civet cat—with the inevitable result that these came into prominence and their prices soared.

Craze for Furs.

Now that there is a craze for furs, a woman who goes to buy a coat is likely to buy a fur coat. Fur wraps as formerly she bought coats of cloth and velvet and brocade. She finds need for a long coat for street and carriage wear—the car being the chief vehicle. This coat may be of sealskin, carcal, broadtail, squirrel or any one of several novelty furs and fur fabrics combined with real fur. Mine is, of course, especially, but is popular for winter service and dressy occasions.

This fur belongs to a woman of position in the social world. Her grace and elegance make her a picture or a half-length doll. The woman of today wears a mink coat, instep length, or a soft wrap that completely covers her. The coat is worn over the head and body of the dollman for a year. The affluent one wears Russian sable, nor for the day only, but for all kinds of formal dress as well.

Fur belongs traditionally to the trappings of royalty, and is ever a thing of beauty and refinement. As an entire garment it was not so popular formerly as now, made into garments, wraps and cloaks, long ago. The most exclusive models in ermine of Persian origin are cut full, with wanton use of the fur. Some are the wide, well-arranged garments. Some have a feather blouse, are paneled or scalloped.

In a particularly gorgeous wrap of ermine, a single cape of fur for fall from the neck to the low waistline, richness upon richness. In another style of uncommon grace the upper part of the wrap is draped about the shoulders at one side, where the tail is tucked in. It is worn with a long, heavy tassel of silk. In many of the new styles fur is draped as freely as if it were silk or any lighter material.

For the ball and dinner gown made of the lovely new fabrics in delicate shades, a wrap of ermine is the suitable. But the most distinctive feature that so easily transfers patronage has lost some of its passion for ermine as a dressy wrap, since the fur has been used more and more for more comfortable wear in street coats, and so widely and cleverly imitated.

Ermine is essentially a fur for youth and the most engaging garments made of it are shown in the latest and prettiest designs. Some are long to wear over the dallying dress frocks. Others, in the short Jacquette style, have a decided cachet. One among the many charming designs is the "Jacquette" coat, a band of black velvet and lined with ermine, a narrow band of the fur shading all around the edge, about the collar and the cuffs. The novel feature of this model is that it may be worn inside out, which the dapper girls amuse.

The jacquette of ermine, mole, broadtail, carcal, in black, the natural cream shade, or tan, are new models; and of ermine, rabbit or squirrel are tremendous, popular for lunch at the restaurants and for other informal occasions. One sees really more of these than of the longer coats.

Sealskin has come into its own and is popular this season than it has been for many years. Not the same old coat in stereotyped model that endured so long, but new styles that have decided on the coat. The very latest sealskin is made with either fur or no trimmings. Its skins are selected and the lines of the garment are quite new. Designers have shown the keenest interest in hunting this fur and have presented several models of distinction.

One is a coat cut in straight lines from the throat to the instep, the general build of the garment being boyish. The sleeves are very wide, wide at the chin, and wide, slightly flaring cuffs are added. A dressier model in a seal coat, the collar being wide, being attached to the waist. One other is a loose wrap-around with wide sleeves and deep, soft collar. On this an ornate band of fur wraps around the middle of the garment.

A new favorite has been selected, and chinchilla is now the choice of all a few years for evening. It is not inexpensive, but it is a garment that is essential to the needs of any age. Chinchilla becomes a dowager as well as it does a debutante, though it must be said

Self-For Colored Coats.

Sealskin is smooth and uniform that it works out with unusual success in the deep flounce model, one having a slightly flaring skirt that ripples like a wave. Another sealskin has the sleeves with self-colored cuffs. Some eccentric handwoven wraps are trimmed with skin and other fur, one model having a band of skin around the bottom, and forming the skirt of the coat, extending in a row of straight coat, extending from the waist to the floor, ending low at the waist. Another sealskin has a cap of its own fur, a band of fox outlining the edges and forming the collar and cuffs. This is an over-dramatic appearance and is less smart than the garments of all seal.

A new favorite has been selected, and chinchilla is now the choice of all a few years for evening. It is not inexpensive, but it is a garment that is essential to the needs of any age. Chinchilla becomes a dowager as well as it does a debutante, though it must be said

Henry Ford is just as original in politics as in business. He will accept no nomination as an independent ticket providing it has no platform. He refers to himself by his name and will not line either before or after a nomination. Three hundred delegates from forty-two states have been asked to attend a conference to be held in Detroit, December 12. The purpose of the conference is to adopt such measures as will be necessary to support the nomination and election of Mr. Ford. Those invited will represent all phases of public life, and each one will pay his or her own expenses.

Theatre Notes

Saturday—
Viola Dana in "A Noise in New York."

Newborn pricked up his ear at just two noises; the jingle of silver and the sound of silk. And because Martha Mason had never seen any jingle, Newborn slighted her. Pretty and young and critted—Martha could really draw—these made no difference to Newborn. His idea of a pretty picture was one of these steel engravings in green and yellow that people put in their windows.

Martha left Newborn for New York and the study of art. She would come back soon; she knew, and make a noise in Newborn. There would be a brass hand and Bull Colwell at the station. But did she? It was time to live up to the dreams of eighteen.

Also a comedy, "Family Troubles" and "Movie Chats."

Sunday & Monday—
Walter Reid in "Hill Diggers." This is one of his best.

Also a Sennett Comedy "Watch Your Neighbor."

Tuesday—
Baby Mario Osborne in "A Daughter of the West."

Our Gang comedy "Giant vs. Tank."

"Hammer Valley," Family Night.

Thursday & Friday—
Host Gibson in "Dead Game."

You'll Cheek out Louder on Thursdays.

It's the most thrilling dare-devil picture in which Hoot has ever appeared. See him with his bare hands capture a wild horse in the desert, and give his enemies the surprise of their lives when he comes dazzling right down the main street of the oil kingdom. And just in time for hollidays!

You'll say that this is the liveliest, most glorious entertainment you've ever seen! And no one Hoot could do it; come early!

L. P. "Joan Novak."
